QUARTERBACK

POSITION OVERVIEW

There's plenty of potential at the top end of this year's quarterback class and we should see three or four signal-callers off the board in the top 10. There's plenty of debate as to which quarterback is the top option, from the uber-productive Baker Mayfield to the uber-talented Josh Allen. The two Los Angeles kids are right in the mix as well, Josh Rosen from UCLA and Sam Darnold from USC, and both are similar as their high-end play is No. 1-worthy, but consistency has been an issue for both players. Beyond that, former Heisman Trophy winner, Lamar Jackson, is a hot button issue as his athleticism is undeniable but he's passing is being dissected across the league. There's enough in his arm to build an offense with the right coordinator. And don't sleep on Oklahoma State quarterback Mason Rudolph, who has been quietly productive despite not wowing scouts with a big arm.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Adjusted Completion Percentage (QB)

Taking the commonly used completion percentage a step or two further, we've accounted for a set of factors that help better define a quarterback's performance on passes that were actually aimed at (and delivered to) a targeted receiver. We add back in dropped passes to give the quarterback credit for getting the ball to its destination and take away 'attempts' that were actually throwaways, spikes, or balls that were batted at the line and those that fluttered from his hand when hit as he threw. The result? Top Completion Percentages typically approach or climb slightly past 70 percent, while adjusted completion percentage leaders will be looking at numbers closer to 80 percent.

Passing Under Pressure (QB)

A telling set of stats when considering a quarterback's composure, we've assembled tables of data to show how often they find themselves under duress and how they operate in those situations. Who throws it away and who takes the sack? Whose pressured passes have been picked off most frequently and whose have usually found an open receiver? Every pressured dropback is counted here.

Deep Passing (QB)

Using our target location data, we've selected passing attempts that traveled 20 yards or more in the air. From that sample we offer a look at typical passing numbers as well as attempt percentage (number of deep passes relative to all attempts) and show the quarterback's adjusted completion percentage on such throws. Whether you are looking to see who is going deep most often or who has been most successful at it, we've got the numbers here.

	15	7	4	57.1%	43	6.1	0	0

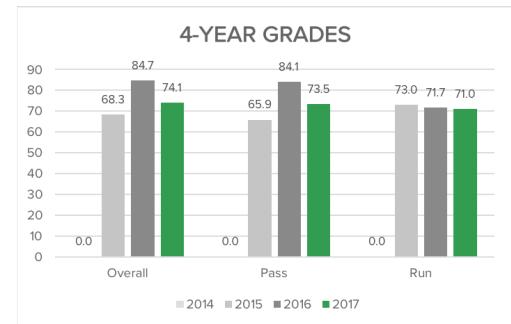

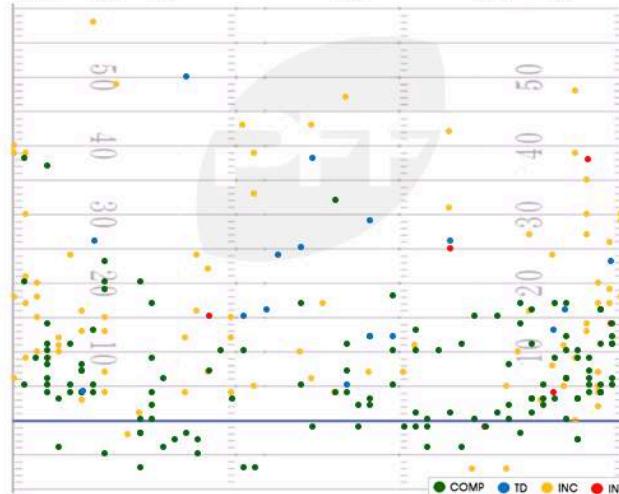

OVERVIEW:

- Top-notch velocity and ability to create downfield opportunities both off-platform and when throwing on the run.
- Makes spectacular plays outside the pocket and on the run. Almost looks more comfortable there.
- Posted the 3rd-highest grade in the draft class in the red zone last season.
- Ranked 7th in the draft class in big-time throw percentage last season after posting the highest percentage in 2016.
- Must make better decisions. Ranked 28th in the draft class at avoiding turnover-worthy plays last season.
- Short-area accuracy is an issue and ranked 24th in the draft class in PFF grade on short (0-9-yard) passes.
- Had the 4th-highest percentage of negatively graded throws in the draft class last season.
- Had an outstanding week at the Senior Bowl, dominating the 1-on-1s.

BOTTOM LINE:

Allen certainly looks the part with his frame, athleticism, and cannon, but there's plenty of projection to his game. Even in a strong 2016 season, there were questions as to how well he can play within structure and in the short game, and that was before his performance took a step back in 2017. While the tools are tantalizing, and he can make the big-time throws necessary for the NFL, he must get better at handling the easy stuff, from working in the quick game to throwing with touch and accuracy to all levels of the field.

OVERVIEW:

- Loose arm creates easy velocity at all levels. Gets the ball down the field with ease.
- Posted the 4th-highest grade in the draft class in the red zone.
- Ranked 36th out of 37 draft QBs in PFF grade when facing pressure.
- Ranked 30th out of 37 draft-eligible QBs at avoiding turnover-worthy plays last season.
- Ranked 35th in the draft class in adjusted completion percentage on deep (20-plus yard) throws (32.9 percent).
- Posted the 9th-highest percentage of negatively graded throws in the draft class last season.
- Throws well on the move, but he's a backyard player outside the pocket. Can drop it in a bucket or zip it into a tight window, but also forces too many passes late in the down.
- Too many poor fumbles when trying to do too much outside the pocket.
- Tape is littered with well-placed bucket throws.

BOTTOM LINE:

Benkert is another tools-first prospect who has to clean up the finer points of his game. He'll make a few jaw-dropping throws down the field, either dropping them in a bucket or while on the move, but for every great throw there's another poor decision in there as well. He's a developmental prospect who must improve his accuracy and decision-making in order to succeed at the next level.

2015	0	0	0	0.0%	0	0.0	0	0

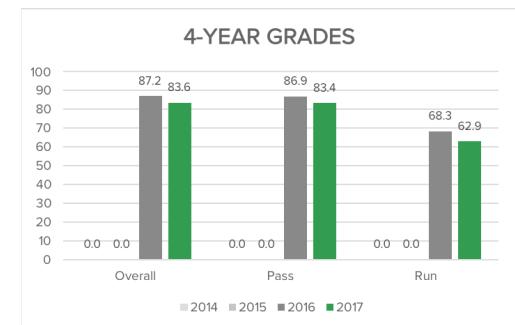

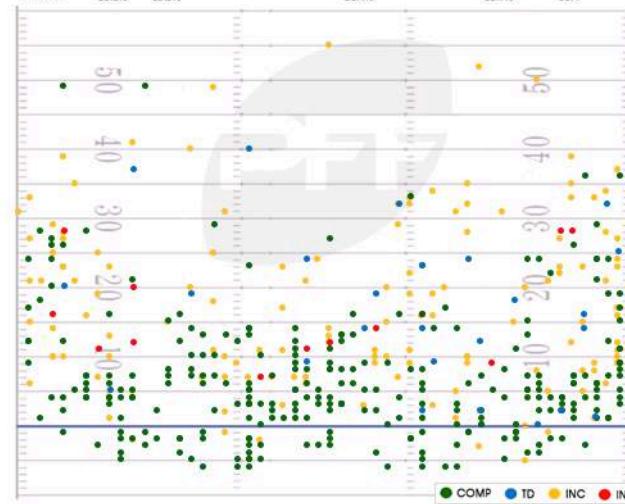

OVERVIEW:

- Excellent feel in the middle of the field. Throws with anticipation and knows how to throw receivers open against zone coverage.
- Posted the No. 2 grade on intermediate throws in 2016 but ranked only 23rd in the draft class last season.
- Ranked second in the draft class with a big-time throw percentage of 6.8.
- Throws well on the run, but will make a few ugly throws off-platform.
- Long throwing motion will get some publicity, but it's not an issue when he's playing confidently (2016). Was an issue at times last season, and there were some ugly fumbles on tape.
- Far too many poor decisions last season. Ranked 33rd out of 38 draft-class qualifiers at avoiding turnover-worthy throws.
- Tied for the 3rd-highest grade in the class on short (0-9-yard) passes.
- Still has work to do on the deep ball. Wasn't great in 2016, ranked 22nd in adjusted completion percentage last season.

BOTTOM LINE:

There's plenty of concern after Darnold was much riskier with the ball in 2017, but his 2016 was one of the best seasons you'll see from a redshirt freshman. Even during his slump, the high-end plays were still present, as few college quarterbacks possess Darnold's anticipation and accuracy in the middle of the field. He must cut back on the turnover-worthy throws that littered his tape in 2017. His throwing motion, rightly or wrongly, will likely be dissected at the next level, but overall, Darnold's top end play is worth a first-round investment.

OVERVIEW:

- Efficient, quick release. Touch thrower.
- Arm strength is a question mark, especially outside the numbers.
- Will get through reads and throws efficiently in the short game.
- Had the 2nd-highest percentage of turnover-worthy throws on intermediate (10-19-yards) attempts.
- Ranked 33rd in the draft class in PFF grade on intermediate throws.
- Inflated stats coming out of Washington State passing scheme and rarely faced heavy pressure.
- When he did face pressure last year, was sacked on 25.5 percent of his drop backs, 4th-highest in the draft class.
- Ranked 33rd in the draft class in big-time throw percentage last season.
- Ranked 27th in the draft class at avoiding turnover-worthy plays.
- Was better in previous seasons. Can he get back to previous form?

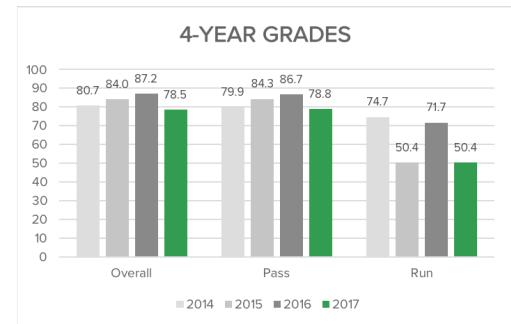

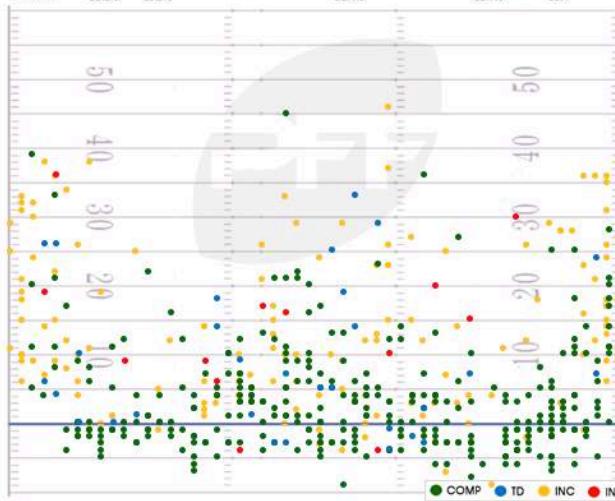

BOTTOM LINE:

Last season did not go as planned for Falk, who took a step back while battling through injury. Even at his best, his arm strength is a question mark, as he struggles to consistently drive the ball outside the numbers on out-breaking routes. He has good touch and feel for in the short game, but arm strength and athleticism issues raise enough questions that he can create enough big plays at the next level.

OVERVIEW:

- Good arm, can zip the ball into tight windows and get the ball down the field when off-platform.
- Had the 9th-highest percentage of positively graded throws last season.
- Had the 5th-best grade in the draft class on intermediate throws last season.
- Must improve his touch in the short game.
- Ranked only 31st in the draft class on deep passes last season.
- Falls off too many throws and gets himself into trouble. Ranked 24th in the draft class in PFF grade under pressure in 2017.
- Trusts his arm too much in the middle of the field. Led to his ranking 27th in the draft class at avoiding turnover-worthy throws last season.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ferguson has good size and solid velocity, but he got away with far too many ill-advised passes last season despite throwing only nine interceptions. The tools are worth a look, as he's capable of driving the ball down the field, but he trusts himself too much when throwing into tight windows and he must improve in the short game, where he posted the No. 20 grade in the draft class last season.

OVERVIEW:

- Ranked 14th out of 37 draft-eligible quarterbacks at avoiding turnover-worthy plays last season.
- Turnover-worthy plays contain far too many instances where Jackson mis-read or didn't see underneath linebackers.
- Posted the No. 3 grade in the draft class when facing pressure.
- Had the 9th-highest grade in the draft class on intermediate (10-19-yard) throws last season.
- Good zip to make tight-window throws and solid touch to get the ball down the field.
- Accuracy is not great. Misses too many throws and ball location needs work on a throw-for-throw basis.
- Had 12th-highest percentage of negatively graded plays last season.
- Dynamic athlete. Rushed for 4,790 yards on 556 carries (8.7 yards/attempt) during his three-year career.

BOTTOM LINE:

While he's not the cleanest passer in the class, Jackson has showed enough with his arm that he can make plays at the next level, and when paired with his incredible athleticism, there's an offense to be built around Jackson's game. He'll miss his fair share of throws, but he can make up for it with enough arm to make special throws downfield. It may take a creative offensive mind, but Jackson can be an exceptional option in the designed run game while opening up bigger pass windows to ease the burden of his inconsistent accuracy.

OVERVIEW:

- Has the zip to fire the ball into tight windows.
- Throws off balance far too often.
- Ranked 36th out of 37 draft-eligible quarterbacks at avoiding turnover-worthy plays last season.
- Had the No. 35 PFF grade on third and fourth down.
- Throws far too many ill-advised passes. Had the 2nd-highest percentage of turnover-worthy plays in the draft class.
- Posted the 10th-highest percentage of negatively graded throws in the draft class last season.
- Had his struggles at the Senior Bowl, with the lowest PFF grade during 1-on-1 and team drills.

BOTTOM LINE:

Lee catches the attention of scouts with good size and a solid arm, but there's a lot of work to be done on the field. He fires far too many passes into coverage and his accuracy comes and goes. While the top-end plays are NFL caliber, Lee's accuracy and decision-making are huge question marks and he's a project at this stage in his development.

OVERVIEW:

- Unmatched career as far as on-field production. Posted the top two individual seasons in four years of PFF grading.
- Has plenty of arm to make tight-window throws, even off platform.
- Natural playmaker capable of creating big plays both within and outside of structure.
- Made plenty of NFL throws throughout his career, but production was also aided by favorable Oklahoma offense.
- Will hold the ball too long at times, inviting late pressure. Will need to play on rhythm more consistently at the next level.
- Led the nation with a passer rating of 139.9 when blitzed and also led at 135.7 when not blitzed.
- Posted highest grade in the nation both from a clean pocket, pressured.
- Led the draft class with a big-time throw percentage of 7.58 last season.
- Tied for the 5th-lowest percentage of turnover-worthy plays in the class.

BOTTOM LINE:

At some point, Mayfield's on-field production is too difficult to ignore and that's what makes him a first-round talent. He has enough arm to make NFL throws and he's shown the ability to make plays both within and outside of structure. While he could stand to speed up his process on certain plays, Mayfield's accuracy, decision-making and natural playmaking ability make him the best quarterback in the draft, and only a few inches of height have instilled doubt in NFL decision-makers.

OVERVIEW:

- Posted the highest grade in the draft class on intermediate throws.
- Aggressive thrower in tight windows; works both for and against him.
- Instinctive passer capable of working full-field progressions.
- Generally throws with good balance, but capable of throwing accurately when off-platform.
- Has the full arsenal of throws. Can fire the seam or layer the ball over linebackers. Has a good feel for back-shoulder throws.
- Ranked eighth in the draft class in big-time throw percentage at 5.72.
- Ranked only 24th out of 38 draft-class qualifiers at avoiding turnover-worthy throws.
- Had the 4th-highest percentage of turnover-worthy throws in the red zone among draft-eligible quarterbacks.
- Ranked only 24th in the draft class in PFF grading on deep passes.

BOTTOM LINE:

Seemingly destined for the first round since he stepped onto campus, Rosen put together a strong career at UCLA, though he never truly dominated like a first-round lock should have. Still, he has a good feel for getting the ball down the field and a fearless mentality works both for and against him, as he'll create big plays while also sprinkling in a few head-scratchers. Overall, Rosen's top-end plays add enough value that the volatility is worth a shot at the top of the first round.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rudolph did a fantastic job running Oklahoma State's offense, but there are plenty of question marks given his NFL-caliber receivers and opposing Big 12 defenses. However, he's showed the ability to zip the ball outside the numbers while continuing to improve his work in the middle of the field. He could stand to throw a cleaner ball on a down-to-down basis, but Rudolph's on-field production is too difficult to ignore and he should be in the first-round mix.

OVERVIEW:

- Throws with good touch down the field. Ranked No. 4 in the draft class in PFF grade on deep passes last season.
- Had the No. 11 grade in the draft class on intermediate throws.
- Doesn't have great zip, but can throw with timing and accuracy outside the numbers.
- Had the 3rd-lowest percentage of turnover-worthy plays in the draft class.
- Many of his turnover-worthy throws came on ill-advised throws to underneath linebackers.
- Willing to stand in there and take a hit under pressure and that works both for and against him. Had the 25th-highest PFF grade when facing pressure last season.
- Ranked only 32nd in the draft-class in positively graded throws, but had the 2nd-lowest percentage of negatively graded throws.

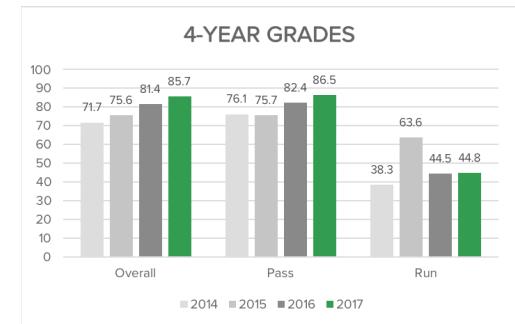

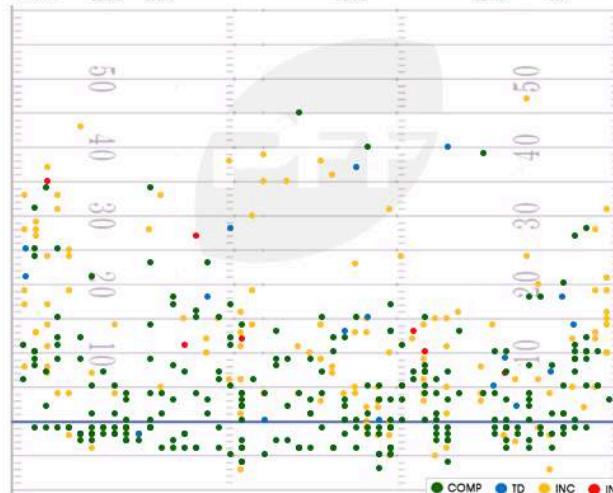

BOTTOM LINE:

Silvers doesn't wow with physical tools, but he's an efficient quarterback capable of winning with timing and accuracy. He landed on the game-manager spectrum, even in college, so that likely limits what he can do at the next level. He makes up for average arm strength with quick decision-making and timing, and there may be a backup role waiting for him at the next level.

OVERVIEW:

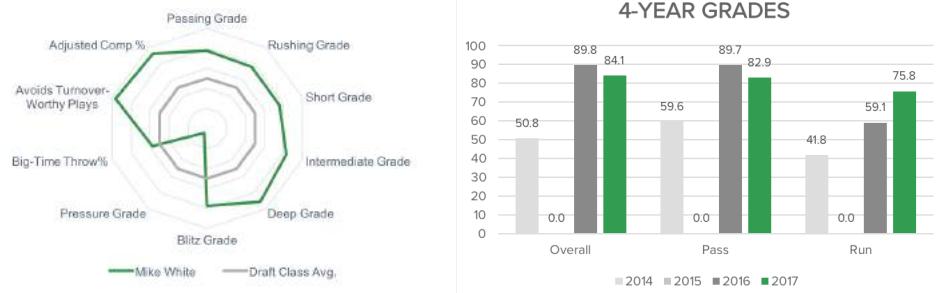

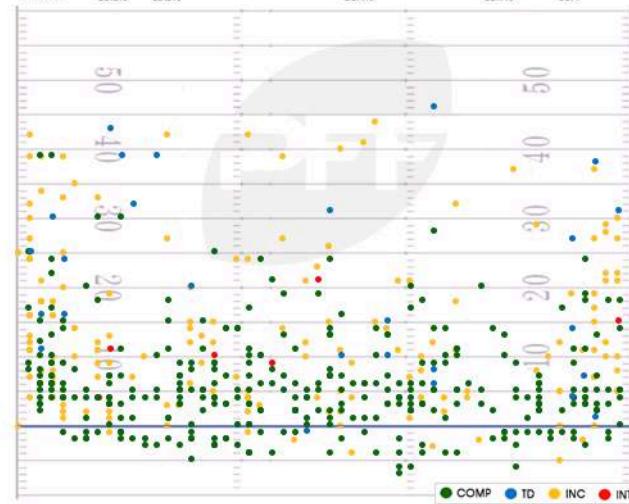

- Ranked 34th out of 38 qualifiers in PFF grade when facing pressure last season.
- Maneuvers the pocket well to find room to throw, but struggles to evade rushers. Sacked on 23.0 percent of his pressured drop backs last season, 5th-highest in the class.
- Willing to make difficult throws under pressure.
- Posted 11th-highest PFF grade in the draft class on third-/fourth-down situations.
- Posted 7th-lowest percentage of turnover-worthy plays in the draft class last season.
- Many of his poor throws are thrown just a tick late and off rhythm.
- Posted 6th-highest grade in the draft class on deep (20-plus yard) throws.
- Throws with zip and touch to at the intermediate level.

BOTTOM LINE:

The 2017 season didn't start out great for White, who adjusted to a new offense, but he improved down the stretch. His 2016 season saw him break out and attack down the field, so the big-play potential is there. White has the arm to win at all levels of the field, but he must be more consistent with his timing and there's a concern that he can't make plays outside of structure like other quarterbacks in the draft class. Still, he's worth a mid-round look as a developmental option who has put much more good than bad on tape.

RUNNING BACK

This year's running back group is one of the strengths of the draft, with incredible strength and depth to go along with one of the true star prospects available.

Penn State's Saquon Barkley is the marquee prospect of the group, with very little flaw to his game and plenty of added value with his work as a receiver and a return man. Barkley should go high in the first round, but outside of Barkley, there is still plenty of high-level talent that could immediately upgrade multiple teams throughout the NFL.

Lower down the pecking order, there are a number of players that have interesting skill sets, even if some are one dimensional players. These players could become effective role players in today's league, which features several teams that operate with backfields by committee.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Elusive Rating (RB)

As dependent on their blocking as they are, what are running backs actually creating on their own? The PFF elusive rating sifts out their work beyond the help they get. Using the number of missed tackles runners force on all touches (rushing and receiving) and our Yards After Contact tallies, the elusive rating formula spits out a score that helps rank the league's best at making things happen when it's completely up to them.

Pass-Blocking efficiency (RB)

Making full use of our snap data and pressure tallies, plays spent in pass protection are compared to the total number of quarterback disruptions allowed by each player. The pass-blocking efficiency (PBE) formula weighs sacks a bit heavier than hits and hurries and produces a rating that reflects the most efficient pass blockers on a per-pass-blocking snap basis with scores closer to 100 being best. We've got these ratings available for full offensive line units and individually for tackles, guards, centers, tight ends, and running backs.

2015	346	115	852	7.4	470	4.1	98	18	6	0

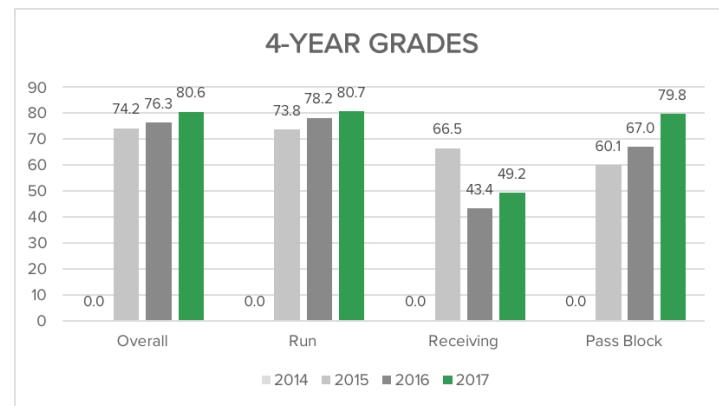

OVERVIEW:

- Averaged 5.2 yards per carry after contact, the highest figure in the draft class by almost a full yard.
- Broke 44 tackles on the ground and another one as a receiver to give him an elusive rating of 116.5, the second-best figure in the draft class.
- Improved his grade in each of the past two seasons as playing time increased. Played 62.1 percent of Notre Dame's snaps in 2017.
- Is extremely hard to stop moving. Had five games in 2017 alone with 100-plus yards after contact.
- Has good long speed, but can take time to hit that top end and needs some open room.
- Was asked to pass block 71 times in 2017, surrendering one sack and four hurries across those snaps.
- Broke at least one tackle in every game this season until the bowl game.

BOTTOM LINE:

Josh Adams is a big, bruising back that has been excellent for Notre Dame at getting into open space and making big plays. He has runs of at least 74 yards in every season of his college career, and when he gets into open space he can be tough to catch with excellent long speed. He doesn't have the best short area burst and quickness, but shows the ability to read cutback lanes and find daylight. May be less successful at the NFL level where that short area quickness is more of a premium.

OVERVIEW:

- A versatile player who has shown the ability to run the ball, catch it and return kicks well, but never put it all together in the same season.
- Ballage's measurables are impressive and he is a physical specimen, so will likely see his hype rise post-combine workouts.
- Was exceptional during the week of practice as a receiver at the Senior Bowl, winning consistently in all practice scenarios.
- Coming off his lowest grade of the past three seasons, but was used confusingly at Arizona St., often as a wildcat QB (70 times over 2016-7).
- Only averaged 2.7 yards per carry after contact over his college career, lower than a player of his size and talent should.
- Broke only 15 tackles from 167 carries in 2017, and has never broken more than 16 in a season.
- May be a better receiver than ball carrier, but displays intriguing skills in all areas.

BOTTOM LINE:

Kalen Ballage is a player of intriguing potential and versatility, whose stock is likely to rise in the lead up to the draft. He is an impressive athlete in a big body, and has the ability to perform well on the ground, catching the ball in the pass game and returning kicks. He was extremely impressive as a receiver during the week of Senior Bowl practices and will likely blow up at the combine during workouts, but teams will need to reconcile that with relatively pedestrian college production.

OVERVIEW:

- One of the best receiving backs in the nation, gained 1.9 yards per route run, led all FBS RBs with at least 40 targets.
- A threat to take it to the house on any carry, ranked fifth among all FBS RBs with a breakaway percentage of 56.8.
- Broke 35 tackles on 200 carries in 2017.
- Averaged 3.4 yards per carry after contact.
- Had an elusive rating of 65.6, good for 26th in the nation in 2017. Elusive rating declined each of the past two seasons.
- Pass protection has not been stellar, allowed at least eight total pressures in each of the last three seasons.
- Naturally gifted ball carrier with spectacular skills, his only negative is a natural desire to want to make the big play every carry.
- Can be reluctant to just hit the designed hole and take 2-3 yards when that is all that's available.

BOTTOM LINE:

Saquon Barkley is the most gifted back in this draft class and is a threat to take it to the house on any touch of the football. His only real negative is wanting to make that happen on every carry, occasionally turning down the correct hole to try and bounce it outside and make a bigger play happen. That can lead to him leaving yardage on the table and not taking what's there every carry, but it is offset with his playmaking ability overall. Pass protection has been suspect, but his receiving skills are elite on passing downs.

OVERVIEW:

- Back to his best in 2017 after injury had threatened to derail his career, Chubb averaged 3.8 yards per carry after contact, his best college mark.
- 2017 was the first season of his career in which he didn't fumble the ball. 0 fumbles from 227 touches from scrimmage.
- Was thrown the ball just 37 times in the past four seasons, 20 of which came in 2014. Caught only 13 passes over the past three years.
- Had an elusive rating of 95.2, the fourth-best mark in the draft class.
- Broke 44 tackles from 178 carries and one tackle on two receptions.
- Had 18 runs of 15-plus yards in 2017.
- Has been touted as a top running back prospect for years, but injury threatened to torpedo his value. 2017 was an important big bounce-back season.
- Never played more than 50 percent of Georgia's snaps on offense and his largest single-season workload was 237 touches in 2014.

BOTTOM LINE:

A top high school recruit (top-50 overall), Nick Chubb was dominant as a freshman before a major knee injury ended his sophomore season and threatened to derail his career. He was clearly not the same player in 2016 so this past season was an important bounce-back year, showing the NFL that he hadn't lost the ability to dominate on the ground. Has solid power, cutting ability and speed and despite the injury was never overloaded with work in college. Chubb seems to have fallen out of favor with many, but could be a steal in this class.

2015	674	283	1844	6.5	1067	3.8	64	80	17	2

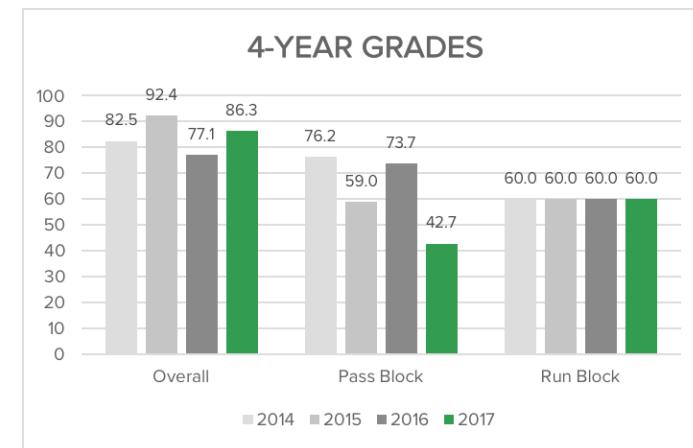

OVERVIEW:

- Freeman's 2015 season is tied for the best single-season overall grade any back in this draft class has on their résumé (92.4).
- Struggled as Oregon's prowess on offense declined over the past couple of seasons, but was dominant in 2015.
- Broke 51 tackles on 243 carries in 2017, gained an average of 3.4 yards after contact and notched 823 yards after the first hit.
- Caught 80 of the 89 passes thrown his way over his college career, breaking 23 tackles after the catch on those 80 catches.
- Allowed a sack and four hurries this season in pass protection from just 49 snaps blocking.
- Has excellent balance and vision and usually hits the right hole at the right time, maximizing the blocking that unfolds in front of him.
- Doesn't immediately play like a player of 230-plus pounds, and has a lot of miles on the clock, which will concern some teams.

BOTTOM LINE:

Oregon's Royce Freeman has had spectacular play at times in college, but his best season came back in 2015, and he hasn't looked the same since, though he was markedly better in 2017. Though a big back, he doesn't always play like it, which is both a good and bad thing depending on the play. His college career shows he can be special in the right situation, but also that he can struggle to overcome suboptimal blocking and won't offset a bad offensive line. Workload may be a worry for some teams, but he could easily have a big early impact.

OVERVIEW:

- A powerful runner, Guice broke 36 tackles on the ground on 216 carries in 2017.
- Averaged 4.1 yards per carry after contact in both 2015 and 2016, but was almost a full yard lower in 2017 (3.2).
- Was thrown at a total of 40 times over the past three seasons, caught 31 passes and dropped three of the incompletions.
- Had 12 runs of 15 or more yards in 2017, giving him a breakaway percentage of just 29.4, almost 20 points lower than the class leaders.
- Finished with an overall grade of 85.0 or higher in each of the past two seasons.
- Shows good patience, ability to cut and accelerate into holes at the line of scrimmage and generate yards at the second level.
- Has prototypical size and measurables, and has graded well in limited use as a receiver. Seen as one of the top backs in this class.

BOTTOM LINE:

Derrius Guice is the latest back to come out of LSU, following in the footsteps of Leonard Fournette a season ago. Guice has prototypical size, speed and measurables and has been very productive over his college career. He ticks all of the boxes in terms of his patience and vision to hit the right hole but can occasionally fail to wow with his big play ability. He wasn't a huge part of the passing game at LSU but graded well on those snaps when he was used and should have the ability to expand that at the NFL level.

OVERVIEW:

- Broke 50 tackles on 285 carries in 2017, averaged 2.9 yards per carry after contact and gained 826 yards after the first hit.
- Has an ability to glide as a runner to the hole and then shift gears through the gap in a way reminiscent of Arian Foster.
- Had 16 runs of 150-plus yards, giving him a breakaway percentage of 33.8, 23rd in the draft class.
- Overall grade improved dramatically each season of his career, resulting in the 87.8 we saw this past season.
- Struggled in Auburn's championship game and bowl game, being held to just 118 total yards on 35 total carries by Georgia and UCF combined.
- Didn't allow a sack from 89 pass-blocking snaps for a pass-blocking efficiency score of 95.8, a top-25 mark in the draft class.
- Runs hard and can drive forward on contact, but too often goes down on the first hit and doesn't generate what you expect from his size.

BOTTOM LINE:

Kerryon Johnson has improved his grade every season and enters the draft after an impressive year in which he had the sixth-best grade in the class. He's a tall, upright runner with good speed and the ability to make big plays, but too often hits the dirt from the first tackle attempt and can't make moves in short spaces to avoid defenders. Has an interesting style of gliding to the hole and then accelerating quickly through it that proves very effective, and has shown he can carry a big workload and be a factor on all three downs.

OVERVIEW:

- Highest-graded back in the nation, not just the draft class, in 2017, with a rushing grade of 93.1 and an overall grade of 92.4.
- No kind of factor in the passing game at USC. Saw just 14 targets in 2017, catching 13 of them, dropping the 14th.
- Saw just 40 targets over past three seasons, 18 fewer than Saquon Barkley saw in 2017 alone.
- Against Power 5 conference opponents, he had the 18 rushes of 15-plus yards (T-5th among all FBS RBs).
- Averaged 3.5 yards per carry after contact in 2017, gained 743 yards after being first hit, broke 50 tackles on 212 carries.
- Extremely reliable, he hits the right hole and takes what's there the vast majority of the time.
- Has been a spectacular runner, but receiving is a question mark after barely featuring in the passing game at USC.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ronald Jones has been a phenomenal ball carrier throughout his college career. He displays excellent vision, speed, moves and reliability – maximizing the available yardage on every play. His ability to play in the passing game is more of an unknown, as he saw very few targets, but he did perform solidly as a pass protector and caught the ball well when it did come his way. Was the highest-graded running back not just of the draft class but in the nation in 2017. Should make an immediate impact in the NFL.

2015	444	219	1160	5.3	725	3.3	66	48	8	2

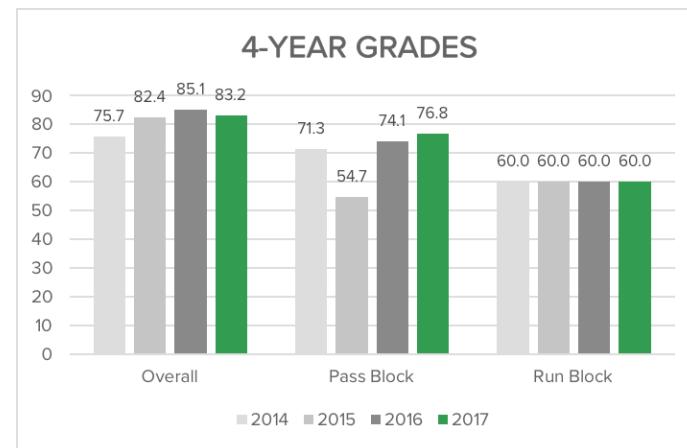

OVERVIEW:

- Part of a backfield partnership with Nick Chubb throughout his career, Michel has only 592 carries across four seasons.
- Has averaged 3.3 yards per carry after contact in his college career, and broke 127 tackles on those 592 carries.
- Hasn't featured much in the passing game, with just 80 targets sent his way over four seasons, caught 63 of them (78.8).
- Gained 3.8 yards per carry after contact in 2017, best average of his career. Broke 36 tackles from 157 carries.
- Has good speed and burst and the ability to cut and change angles quickly, but is more of a straight-line runner than nifty in space.
- Had 16 runs of 15-plus yards in 2017, gaining 903 yards on those big plays for a breakaway percentage of 52.2.
- Allowed just two hurries on 52 pass-blocking snaps in 2017 and gave up just one sack in his college career.

BOTTOM LINE:

Sony Michel is an impressive physical specimen with a big body and good straight-line speed. He shows quick cuts and the ability to get up field in a hurry, turning modest holes into big gains. He is ideally suited to a zone blocking offense, whether that be inside or outside zone, but doesn't have the same short-area quickness and moves of some other backs. Was a bigger factor in the passing game than teammate Nick Chubb, and graded well in that facet over his career. Has relatively few miles on the clock given college workload.

OVERVIEW:

- Forced 80 missed tackles on the ground last season, No. 1 in the draft class.
- Had the 3rd-most rushes of 15-plus yds (30), and 2nd-most yards gained on those rushes (1135) among all FBS RBs.
- Has the ability to take it to the house in an instant. Ranked 7th among all FBS RBs with a 55.8 breakaway percentage.
- Caught 18-of-24 passes thrown his way in 2017, but dropped only one of the incompletions.
- Struggled to pass protect in 2017, allowed two sacks and seven additional hurries on 66 pass-blocking snaps. Was little better the year before.
- Dominated at the Senior Bowl with 64 yards on nine carries and a 73-yard receiving touchdown in the game. Was solid in practices.
- Competition in college will be a factor in his evaluation, but stepped it up at the Senior Bowl and has tape that wows.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rashaad Penny is a powerful back who also has the quickness and speed to make big plays from anywhere on the field. He broke 80 tackles on the ground from his 276 carries, gaining more than 1,200 rushing yards after contact. Penny shows excellent vision, balance and burst when carrying the football, but his work in the passing game is more of a projection. He has struggled in pass protection and hasn't been extensively used as a receiver, so he may be limited to running downs early in his NFL career.

2015	617	207	1098	5.3	653	3.2	61	46	6	3

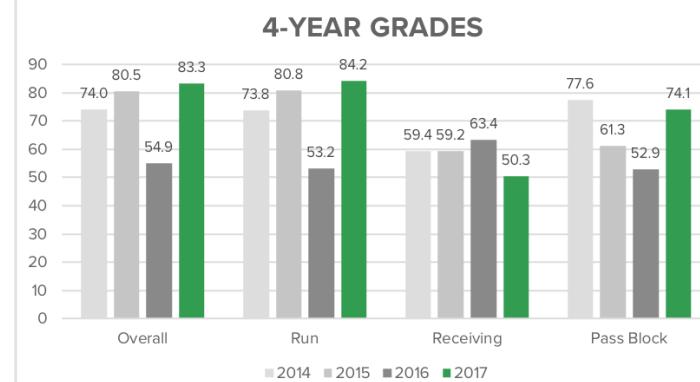

OVERVIEW:

- A big, bruising back, Richard plays with good strength and fight in his runs to get through traffic.
- Broke 27 tackles on 185 carries in 2017, averaged 2.9 yards per carry after contact and gained 537 of his 977 rushing yards after getting hit.
- Saw 100 targets over his college career, but that number went down in each of the past two seasons, as did his playing time.
- Had six drops in 2015 on 45 targets, but hasn't dropped a pass since as his involvement has been dialled back.
- Allowed three sacks over the past two seasons as a pass protector, failing to take advantage of his size and strength.
- Running can lack sophistication at times, and he can be very quick to just lower his head and try to run over defenders rather than find space.

BOTTOM LINE:

Demario Richard is a big, stocky back with an incredibly solid build who attempts to win at the point of attack with blunt force trauma. He runs with good physicality and effort but lacks nuance to his play and doesn't have the athletic gifts to scare defenders. He has experience in the passing game, but drops and poor pass protection saw that scaled back during his college career, so it is unlikely to be a strength in the NFL, leaving him as a two-down role player with good but not spectacular production.

2015	28	18	104	5.8	76	4.2	24	7	1	0

OVERVIEW:

- An imposing physical specimen, Scarbrough is 6-foot-2 and 235 pounds and will remind some of former Alabama teammate Derrick Henry.
- Scarbrough has had just 267 career carries at Alabama, 29 fewer than Henry had in 2015 alone, grading solidly but not spectacularly.
- Has averaged 3.9 yards per carry after contact over his career, but that dropped to just 2.9 in 2017.
- Has never carried the ball 20 or more times in a game, so his capability as a workhorse back is in question in a way it wasn't for Henry.
- Caught 17 of the 20 passes thrown his way in 2017, breaking five tackles after the catch, but dropping two of the incompletions.
- Pass blocking has been suspect, allowed a sack, hit and two hurries from 43 pass-blocking snaps in 2017.
- Has dealt with numerous injuries in his short career, which doesn't bode well for a player reliant on physicality and size.

BOTTOM LINE:

Bo Scarbrough may bear a passing resemblance to former teammate Derrick Henry, but while Henry's durability and production wasn't in question, Scarbrough has never held up to that kind of workload. He is an old school power back who can be dangerous at full speed and in the open field, but has little value in the passing game and isn't capable of generating much yardage on his own without the aid of blocking to let him get rumbling. There is talent there, but he may be a more impressive physique than football player.

2015	97	34	275	8.1	146	4.3	77	13	0	0

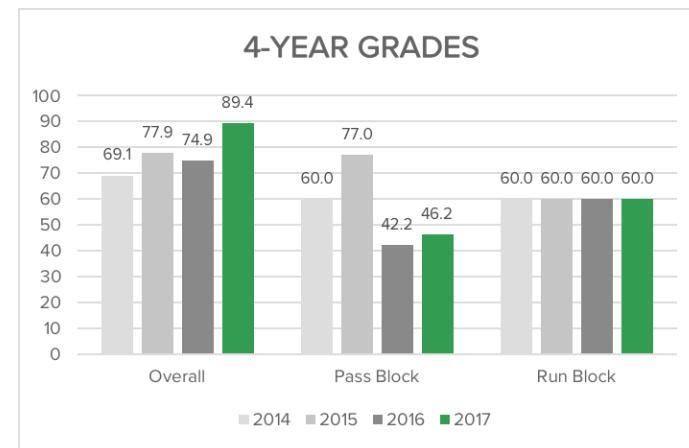

OVERVIEW:

- Stands just 5-foot-7 and weighs around 200 pounds, so is a very undersized back, but one with special numbers in places.
- Broke 51 total tackles on 199 touches from scrimmage in 2017, earning an elusive rating of 99.1, the third-best in the draft class.
- Averaged 3.9 yards per carry after contact despite small size.
- Had 17 runs of 15-plus yards from only 178 attempts.
- Playing time and workload more than doubled in 2017, causing his grade to go through the roof. Had the 3rd-best overall grade in the class (89.5).
- Pass protected 98 times in 2017. Has extensive experience blocking against the blitz, but has not excelled in that area.
- Had mixed results against SEC competition in 2017, gaining over 100 yards against Mississippi State but just 17 against South Carolina.

BOTTOM LINE:

Boston Scott is one of the most interesting prospects in the entire 2018 draft. He is short and undersized, but has made special plays and had the third-best overall grade in the draft class among all backs in 2017. His workload and playing time increased in each of the past two seasons after being a walk-on at Louisiana Tech, causing an explosion in production this year. Scott has exceptional quickness and the ability to make plays on the ground and as a receiver, but will likely need to find a role in the NFL given his size.

OVERVIEW:

- Four seasons of solid grades at Southern Miss, Smith has graded well in all facets of the game, though some more consistently than others.
- Rushing grade has been his most consistent strength, but at 5-foot-9 and under 200 pounds, his NFL future is likely tied more to the pass game.
- Shows the ability to make people miss in a phonebooth, breaking 188 tackles in his college career on 829 carries.
- Averaged 3.1 yards per carry after contact over his college career, and had runs of over 75 yards in each of the last three seasons.
- Flashed talent at the Senior Bowl and did not drop a pass in 1-on-1 drills during the week of practice.
- Did not allow a sack across 88 pass-blocking snaps. His pass-blocking efficiency score of 96.6 was 15th in the draft class.
- Strength of competition will be an issue in projecting Smith, hot on the heels of former teammate WR Mike Thomas struggling in the NFL.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ito Smith has been a fun player to watch in college and has always been capable of making spectacular plays. He is a relatively small back, but he has quickness and the natural ability to make people miss in tight spaces. His acceleration and burst are good, but top speed may be an issue. At his size and ability, he could quickly become a weapon on third downs, but receiving has been the less consistent aspect of his college play. Strength of competition will be a concern for some, but he more than held his own during the Senior Bowl.

OVERVIEW:

- Played in just four games as a junior before an ankle injury shut him down for the year, but was spectacular before getting hurt.
- Is short (5-foot-9), but stocky, and does not look out of place running between the tackles against much larger players.
- Average yards per carry increased every season of his college career, and he had runs of 80-plus yards in his last two seasons.
- Has quickness and speed to burn, and can immediately turn a blocked point of attack into a bounce out gain.
- Was more of a factor in the passing game than some other backs in this class, with 60 targets over his first two seasons.
- Has just one game of 20 or more carries in his career, and durability will be a concern given his size.
- Broke 71 tackles on 394 college carries throughout his career.

BOTTOM LINE:

Mark Walton's tape in 2017 was spectacular, but it lasted just four games before an ankle injury shut him down. Pre-draft measurements will be important, as his listed weights right now span a 17-pound range from 188 to 205. He has a squat and stocky build, but under 200 pounds will have many in the NFL limiting him to a third-down back or role player. Shows the ability to play on all three downs and make plays on the ground or as a receiver. In a strong running back class could be pushed down the draft by bigger-bodied players.

WIDE RECEIVER

POSITION OVERVIEW

There's no clear-cut No. 1 receiver in this year's class, but there's still plenty of talent. Alabama's Calvin Ridley adds a big-play threat, while Colorado State's Michael Gallup may be the best combination of athleticism and production. Oklahoma State has a pair of intriguing receivers in James Washington, who dominated the Senior Bowl, and Marcell Ateman who has the size and body control to become an excellent possession receiver. Keep an eye on SMU's Courtland Sutton, who is more than just a big body at 6-foot-4.

There are a variety of potential playmakers in the class, from contested-catch specialists to vertical threats, to classic slot receivers. The middle rounds are usually littered with value at the receiver position and with few high-end options, this year appears to be no different.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Yards Per Route Run (WR)

Not satisfied with yards per catch or even yards per target as sufficient measuring sticks for receiving production, 'Yards Per Route Run' makes use of our detailed snap data that breaks down what each player was doing on each play. Total receiving yards is divided by the number of plays a receiver spent out in a pattern to give a mark to their per-snap contribution.

Deep Passing (WR)

As with the quarterback's deep passing Signature Stat, this one considers only those passes that travel over 20 yards in the air. For each wide receiver, the numbers posted include: total deep targets, catchable deep passes, drops on deep balls, yards on deep passes, and more, ultimately resulting in target percentage (deep targets as a percentage of all targets), drop rate, and catch rate that serve to put numbers to the notion of the deep threat.

Drop Rate (WR)

Sticky fingers or hands of stone, the league's best (and worst) pass-catchers are highlighted in these tables. Adding up all of the catchable balls every player sees come his way and comparing it to the number that he can't haul in, the drop rate gives black-and-white backing to 'best hands/worst hands' arguments.

Slot Performance (WR)

As the NFL as a whole grows more and more fond of three-receiver sets, the slot receiver position takes on increased importance. Whether they're the quick and shifty coverage-shakers or the freakishly big and athletic mismatches, those doing damage from the slot deserve their due. We've sorted out everything from the number of routes run from the slot to targets, drops, and even slot YPRR.

OVERVIEW:

- Uses his size well to win on slants and downfield routes.
- Ranked ninth in the nation with 320 yards in contested situations.
- Caught 55.0 percent of deep targets, tied for 16th-best among FBS WRs.
- Ranked fourth among draft-eligible receivers with a WR rating of 135.5.
- Shows some quicks when getting off press coverage and it showed in the numbers.
- Against press coverage, caught 15-of-20 attempts for 250 yards and three touchdowns, good for the second-best passer rating in the class at 156.3.
- Dropped only 11 out of 137 catchable targets in his career.
- Doesn't make many defenders miss in space. Forced only 11 missed tackles on 126 career catches.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ateman is an intriguing talent, as he can use his size both in the possession game and down the field, but he may be limited when it comes to creating separation along the entire route tree. He handles press well and he can likely be a weapon in the red zone, but don't expect him to make defenders miss after the catch. Ateman has a complementary role in the NFL, especially if playing with a quarterback who is willing to let him make plays in contested situations.

OVERVIEW:

- Dropped only two of his 75 catchable targets, good for a drop rate of 2.67 that ranked fourth in the nation in 2017. Dropped only four of 156 catchable targets in his career.
- Averaged 2.98 yards per route, tied for 22nd in the nation.
- Targeted only 15 times when facing press coverage and caught only 45.7 percent of those targets.
- Tape is filled with highlight-reel catches as he often lays out to haul in receptions.
- Forced 26 missed tackles on 152 career receptions, averaging 5.8 yards after the catch per reception.
- Lacks great vertical speed, but can separate down the field on vertical routes.
- Struggles getting off press against physical corners.

BOTTOM LINE:

Burnett has some wiggle to his game as a route-runner that lends itself to the slot or a 'Z' receiver role on the outside. He lacks the size and physicality to handle press coverage and he's not great in contested situations, but he's shown the ability to make diving catches on off-target throws. Burnett projects as a sure-handed slot receiver who has his limitations on the outside.

OVERVIEW:

- Faced 5th-most targets against press coverage in 2017. Caught 54.8 percent.
- Caught only 23.5 percent of his deep targets in 2017 after catching 43.8 percent in 2016.
- Has big-play potential. Knows how to separate down the field to create chunk plays.
- Far too many drops during his three-year career. Finished with 13 drops on 140 catchable targets during his career (9.3 percent).
- Caught only 40 percent of his contested targets last season.
- Forced 26 missed tackles on 130 career catches.
- Not great at catching passes in traffic over the middle.

BOTTOM LINE:

Losing Deshaun Watson hurt Cain's downfield production in 2017, but he has shown a second gear and the feel for creating late separation in order to be a deep threat. He still has work to do in order to cut down on his drops, but he's also shown the ability to make spectacular, downfield catches. He does his best work on the vertical route tree and may never be a dependable middle-of-the-field option, but he can make his mark on the outside in a vertical scheme.

OVERVIEW:

- Good combination of speed and quickness that shows up on the field.
- Ranked second in the nation with 1,088 receiving yards from the slot.
- Caught 66.7 percent of his deep targets, fourth-best in the nation.
- Ranked second in the draft class with a WR Rating of 139.7.
- Ranked eighth in the nation with 542 yards on deep passes despite tying for 114th with only 18 deep targets.
- Averaged 8.5 yards after the catch per reception and forced 39 missed tackles on his 160 catches over the last three years.
- Dropped 17 passes on 177 catchable targets in his career.
- Has value on 'gadget' plays at the next level, though only given eight career rushing attempts.
- Caught only three of 15 contested catch opportunities.

BOTTOM LINE:

There's a role for Coutee in the slot at the next level, where he'll be more than just a quick receiver capable of winning in the underneath game. His speed and body control make him a vertical threat, and a creative team may be able to maximize his value on jet sweeps and other 'space' plays. His lack of size can be an issue on the outside, but Coutee's speed and quickness make him a weapon at the next level.

OVERVIEW:

- Ranked 15th in yards per route in 2017 (3.18) and second in 2016 (4.34).
- Gained 250 yards on screen passes in 2017, 3rd-most among FBS WRs.
- Faced press coverage on 64 of his targets in 2017, most among FBS WRs. Caught 30 of those 64 targets for 568 yards (8.8 yards/target).
- Smooth route runner and uses his hands well both against press and at the catch point.
- Good acceleration allows him to eat up cushion on cornerbacks.
- Good feel for making defenders miss in the open field and forced 38 misses on his 179 catches the last two seasons.
- Caught only 31.3 percent of his deep targets last season (171st in nation) after catching 38.5 percent in 2016.
- Dropped only 12 of 191 catchable targets over the last two seasons.
- Had a strong week at the Senior Bowl, grading well during team drills and in the game itself.

BOTTOM LINE:

In a wide receiver class that lacks true top-10 overall talent, Gallup may be the best all-around option. He has the speed to make plays down the field and his feel for route-running and making defenders miss after the catch make him a threat at the short and intermediate levels. Gallup's two-year production is as good as it gets in the class and when combined with his physical tools, he should be one of the top wide receivers off the board.

2015	643	45	81	55.6%	583	266	5.9	13.0	7.2	6	4

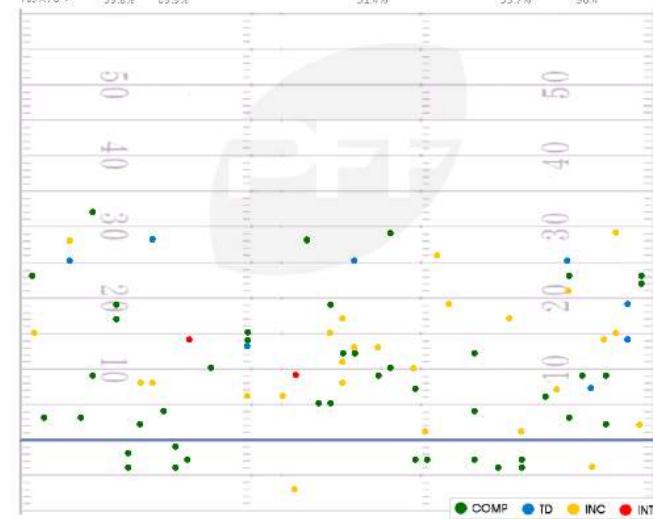

OVERVIEW:

- Led all FBS receivers with a deep catch rate of 73.3 percent in 2017.
- Gained 845 yards from the slot last season, 8th-most among FBS WRs.
- Attacks the ball in the air. Caught 61 percent of contested targets, 22nd-best in the nation.
- Savvy route runner. Varies the speed of his routes and knows how to set up defenders.
- Uses his hands well down the field to create late separation.
- Understands timing of route concepts and how to work off other WRs.
- Excellent week of practice of the Senior Bowl, where he ranked third among wide receivers in 1-on-1 PFF grading.
- Dropped 25 passes on 253 catchable passes in his career.
- Played 3,149 snaps in his four years at Penn State (787 per season).

BOTTOM LINE:

Hamilton had a productive career at Penn State, with a slight lull in his numbers in 2015 and 2016. He's a nuanced route-runner who developed into a big-play threat from the slot for Penn State, a role he could fill at the next level, perhaps in the mold of Atlanta Falcons wide receiver Mohamed Sanu. He may top out as a No. 3 option, but he can be productive in that role given his feel for the game and ability to make plays at the catch point.

OVERVIEW:

- Averaged 2.51 yards per route from the slot, 7th-best in the draft class.
- Dropped 18 of 251 catchable targets in his career.
- Forced 35 missed tackles on 233 career catches.
- Good straight-line speed. Works hard to get on top of defensive backs on vertical routes and it creates big-play opportunities.
- Creates big plays more with speed than quicks.
- Accelerates out of his routes allowing him to separate at the top of the stem.
- Adds punt return value with six career returns for touchdowns.
- Lined up on the outside on 21 times in 2017
- Can be used in jet sweep game

BOTTOM LINE:

Kirk may not be as good as some of the hype, but he's an explosive playmaker with an excellent combination of speed and quickness. He's does most of his damage with his straight-line speed and he can stretch the field from the slot in a vertical offense. He adds special teams value as well as the ability to make plays on gadget plays. Kirk is yet another playmaking slot receiver in this draft class.

OVERVIEW:

- Three straight years of excellent production at Memphis.
- Ranked 15th in the nation in yards per route in 2016 (3.22) and ranked ninth in 2017 (3.47).
- Has the speed to run by defenders when given a free release.
- Has the quickness and route-running ability to win from the slot. Ranked sixth in yards per route from the slot at 3.43.
- Nifty after the catch. Forced 19 missed tackles on 96 catches last season and forced an impressive 18 misses on only 47 catches in 2015.
- Averaged 6.9 yards after the catch per reception in his three years.
- Led the nation with 288 yards on screen passes.
- Showed impressive skills on contested targets and tied for the national lead with six touchdowns in such situations.
- Drops have been an issue as he has 21 on his 212 catchable targets the past two years.

BOTTOM LINE:

Miller is one of the few receivers in the class capable of winning both on the outside and in the slot. He has excellent quickness and route-running ability, allowing him to get open and make defenders miss after the catch, but he's also capable of making tight-window, highlight-reel catches. Much like Sterling Shepard of the New York Giants, Miller may find most of his NFL production in the slot, but his speed and quickness could also be a weapon on the outside.

OVERVIEW:

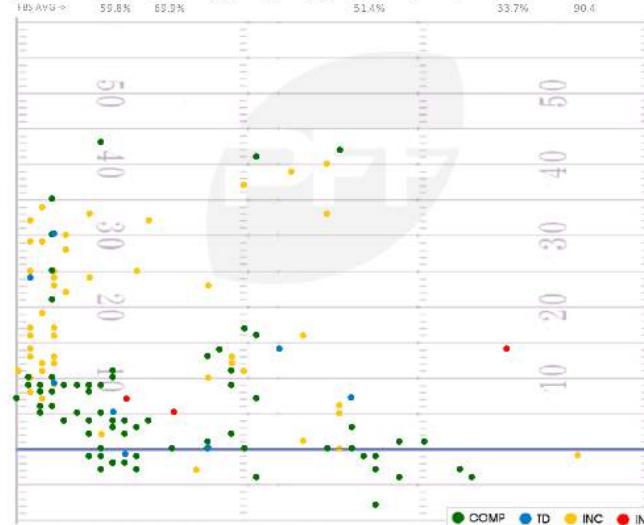

- Targeted on 36 percent of his routes, 3rd-most among draft-eligible WRs and was targeted 131 times, 6th-most among draft-eligible WRs.
- Ranked 16th among draft-eligible receivers with 2.78 yards per route.
- Caught only 38.5 percent of his contested targets, but still had plenty of highlight-reel, downfield catches on film.
- Excellent acceleration, both in his routes and with the ball in his hands.
- Catches the ball and flies up field, especially on screens. Averaged 7.0 yards after the catch per reception in his career.
- Forced 39 missed tackles on 146 career receptions.
- Dropped 15 passes on 161 catchable targets in his career.
- Did most of his damage on the outside at Maryland, but has the skillset to produce from the slot at the next level.
- Shows the toughness to make plays in the middle of the field.

BOTTOM LINE:

Moore's speed and quickness make him a weapon as a route runner and after the catch, where he tenaciously gets up the field as soon as he catches the ball. He has the toughness to work the middle of the field, and despite inconsistency at the catch point, he's willing to go up and make plays in traffic and he came down with his fair share. Moore could do damage both outside or in the slot, but taking advantage of his after-the-catch skills should be in the cards regardless of alignment.

OVERVIEW:

- Caught 57.9 percent of contested targets, 29th-best in the nation.
- Adjusts well to off-target throws.
- Uses his frame well down the field. Caught 43.5 percent of his deep targets last season, tied for 75th in the nation.
- Ran limited route tree in Missouri offense.
- Long strides and solid straight-line speed. Gets on cornerbacks in a hurry.
- Solid showing after the catching in 2017, forcing 14 missed tackles on 66 catches and averaging 6.5 yards after the catch per reception.
- Dropped 24-of-173 catchable targets in his career.
- Had a good showing during the week of practice at the Senior Bowl. Ranked fourth among receivers in PFF 1-on-1 grading.

BOTTOM LINE:

Like many receivers coming out of the 'Baylor' system that Missouri runs, Moore will have to adjust the NFL's more intricate route tree. He has good straight-line speed, allowing him to gain ground into the secondary and he has a knack for using his body to secure downfield throws. He has some work to do in the short and intermediate game, but Moore could have value as a potential deep threat while he develops the rest of his game.

OVERVIEW:

- Dropped only three of his 64 catchable targets, good for a drop rate of 4.69 that ranked 13th in the nation in 2017.
- Smooth route runner. Sharp in and out of his cuts.
- Uses hands to separate at the top of routes.
- Nifty footwork to get off press coverage.
- Sure-handed. Dropped only seven passes on 169 catchable targets during his four-year career.
- Outstanding punt returner. Set NCAA career mark with nine touchdown returns for touchdowns.
- Athleticism doesn't always show up down to down on the field.

BOTTOM LINE:

Pettis has a good feel for the game, whether getting off press, separating at the top of routes, or finding holes in zones. He adds punt return value after a record-breaking career at Washington, and he fits in as a dependable, sure-handed option who can work on the outside or in the slot. He may never develop into a big-play threat down the field, but Pettis is a solid complementary option to a receiving corps that has other vertical threats.

OVERVIEW:

- Dropped only two of his 73 catchable passes in 2017. Only dropped 10 passes on 245 catchable targets in his four-year career.
- Caught only 34.8 percent of contested targets.
- Caught 43.5 percent of his deep targets last season, tied for 75th in the nation. Many of his downfield plays were manufactured by scheme.
- Inconsistent getting off press coverage. Will flash good footwork, but still gets tied up with cornerbacks far too often.
- Lacks great straight-line speed.
- Forced 40 missed tackles on 235 career catches.

BOTTOM LINE:

There's not much that stands out as special to Phillips' game. He's not a burner, inconsistent at getting off press coverage, and below-average in contested situations. However, he did improve every year at Virginia Tech and he's sure-handed, and there are enough intriguing plays on tape to warrant a look in the late rounds. Right now, Phillips is more in line with a backup receiver capable of producing in the possession game.

OVERVIEW:

- Led all FBS wide receivers with 4.66 yards per route run from the slot.
- Had the lowest drop rate in the nation among receivers with at least 100 targets in 2017, dropping only two of 116 catchable passes (1.72 percent).
- Caught 60.0 percent of his deep targets, tied for eighth among FBS wide receivers.
- Lacks top-end speed and athleticism
- Shows toughness both at the catch point and after the catch.
- Efficient footwork allows him to create separation, especially when given a two-way go in the slot.
- Solid catch radius and body control. Caught 57.1 percent of contested catch opportunities.
- Good feel for getting open against zone.

BOTTOM LINE:

Quinn doesn't possess the speed to be a deep threat on the outside, but he's a good 'feel' player who can find a home in the possession game at the next level. He has some subtlety to his short-area route running and he has a good feel for getting open against zones and feeling defenders after the catch. While he's not a dynamic athlete, it would not surprise to see Quinn's route running, dependable hands, and feel for the game lead to a productive career.

OVERVIEW:

- Excellent speed makes him a big-play threat. Accelerates off the line and gets to second gear very quickly.
- Attacks off-corners in a hurry, allowing him to get on top of them for deep routes or open up the underneath route tree.
- Explosive route-runner who maintains his speed in and out of breaks.
- Dropped 23 out of 247 catchable passes in his three years at Alabama. Career drop rate of 9.3% would have ranked 193rd in the nation in 2017.
- Production limited in run-first Alabama scheme.
- Averaged 45.1 yards per catch on deep passes, sixth-best among draft-eligible receivers.
- Took a step back in the screen game last year, gaining only 40 yards on 10 receptions, after tying for third in the nation with 3 TDs on screens in '16.
- Age will always be a question. At 23 years old, is he just a man among boys in college football?

BOTTOM LINE:

Few receivers possess the downfield speed and route running that Ridley displays on a weekly basis, it's just unfortunate that we didn't get to see it play out in a pass-heavy offense. He gets on defensive backs in a hurry and his crisp route-running makes him a threat in the short and intermediate game. Ridley is a potential deep threat on the outside who must be accounted for by opposing defenses, and outside of the age question mark and a high percentage of drops, he looks like one of the top receivers in the draft.

OVERVIEW:

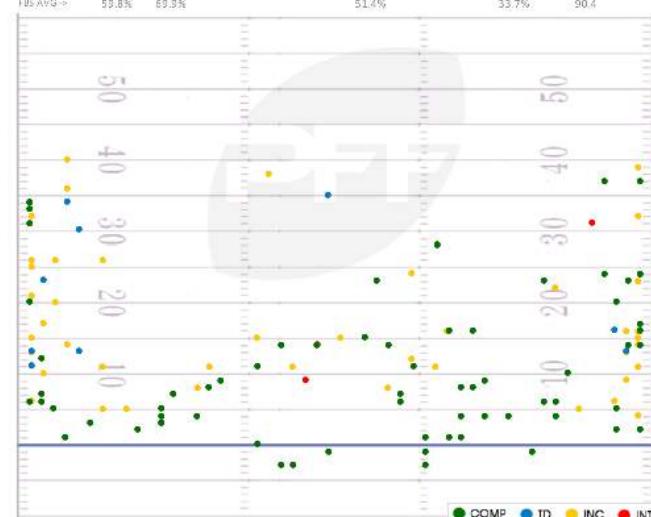

- Caught 55.9 percent of his deep targets, 14th-best in the nation.
- Ranked 7th in the nation with 326 yards in contested situations.
- Long frame and catch radius combines with excellent body control to create tape littered with incredible catches.
- Struggled during week of Senior Bowl practice, winning only 27 percent of 1-on-1 reps.
- Dropped 10 of 180 catchable targets in his two-year career.
- Provides little after the catch. Forced only six missed tackles on 99 career catches.
- Averaged only 2.8 yards after the catch per reception in career.

BOTTOM LINE:

Scott has plenty of outstanding plays on his tape, but he struggles to consistently create separation. His struggles were highlighted during the week at the Senior Bowl, but there's still a role for Scott at the next level if paired with a quarterback willing to give him tight-window opportunities. His size, frame, and body control make him a viable red zone threat, but his every-down value is a question mark.

OVERVIEW:

- Caught 70.84 percent of his deep targets, second-best in the nation. Led all FBS receivers with nine touchdowns on deep passes.
- 55.4 percent of receptions went for a first down or a touchdown, second-best among draft-eligible receivers.
- Averaged 9.0 yards per attempt when facing press coverage, tied for 32nd in the nation among wide receivers with at least 20 targets.
- Long strides get on cornerbacks in a hurry.
- Good feel for defenders in the open field. Enhances his big-play ability. Forced 32 missed tackles on 175 career receptions.
- Dropped 16 passes on 191 catchable attempts.
- Shows toughness and body control when catching the ball in traffic.
- Caught 54.5 percent of contested targets and tied for 13th in the nation with four touchdowns.

BOTTOM LINE:

After two solid seasons, Smith broke out as a big-play threat in 2017, averaging 19.2 yards per catch and hauling in 14 touchdowns. He has good size and body control and he uses his long strides to gain ground and separate from cornerbacks down the field. He has the toughness to make plays over the middle of the field and the speed to succeed as a vertical slot option, much like he did at UCF, while also adding value when lined up on the outside.

OVERVIEW:

- Gets in and out of breaks better than most receivers his size. Could still improve his route-running at the top of his breaks.
- Has enough quicks to get off press.
- Solid straight-line playing speed.
- Uses his body well in contested situations. Big catch radius, though he could have done a better job on a few off-target throws in 2017.
- Forced 26 missed tackles on 143 catches over the last two seasons.
- Red zone and back-shoulder weapon at the next level.
- Caught 574 yards on deep (20-plus yard) passes in 2016, 13th-best in the nation.
- Deep pass catch percentage dropped from 45.7 percent in 2016 to 33.3 percent last season.

BOTTOM LINE:

While Sutton's size is the first thing that comes to mind, he moves well for a bigger receiver and he can be more than just a red-zone weapon. His downfield production took a step back last season, but he's shown he's capable of using his body to win down the field and his large catch radius gives quarterbacks a bigger margin for error. Sutton has the size and body control to excel as a possession receiver, but he'll surprise with his work after the catch and more consistent work down the field could make him one of the better all-around receivers in the class.

OVERVIEW:

- Long frame and catch radius that he uses well at the catch point.
- Tied for 6th in the nation with a 66.7 percent catch rate in contested situations.
- Tied for 8th in the nation with a catch percentage of 64.0 when facing press coverage.
- Not an explosive athlete. Struggles to consistently separate.
- Most of his big plays will come in contested situations.
- Only played 1,066 snaps in his three years at Florida State.
- Red-zone and back-shoulder weapon.

BOTTOM LINE:

Like other taller receivers, Tate has a strong highlight reel of off-target and contested catches, and that should make him a valuable red-zone threat at the next level. He's not an explosive or shifty athlete, so he may never become a high-volume option in the passing game, but he's willing to make plays over the middle in traffic. Tate has the skills to be a complementary possession target capable of winning in the back-shoulder game, over the middle and in the red zone.

OVERVIEW:

- Maintains speed in and out of breaks. Allows him to get on cornerbacks quickly and run away from them at the top of the route.
- Ranked eighth in the nation with 3.25 yards per route against Power-5.
- Led the nation with 815 yards on deep passes in 2017 and ranked second with eight touchdowns on deep passes.
- Caught all 10 of his slant targets for 192 yards and three touchdowns.
- Ranked fourth in the nation with 343 yards in contested situations and tied for third with three touchdowns.
- Top receiver during Senior Bowl practice week. Dominated both the 1-on-1s, particularly against press coverage, and the team drills.
- Other than posts and slants, did most of his work outside the numbers. Can he be a middle-of-the-field option?
- Production certainly padded in Big 12, where he was given plenty of 1-on-1 situations with room to work.
- Has continued to improve his ability to win at the catch point.

BOTTOM LINE:

Washington has been one of the nation's most efficient deep receivers over the last three years as he showed the ability to run away from cornerbacks and he's continued to improve his game in contested situations. His speed plays well on the field, especially his ability to maintain it in and out of his cuts, and he answered questions about facing press coverage with a dominant Senior Bowl. Washington should be in the mix to be one of the top WRs off the board.

OVERVIEW:

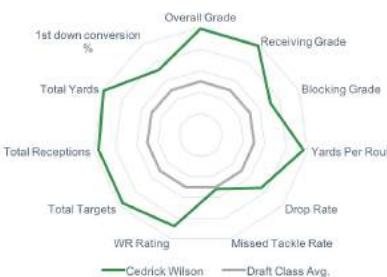

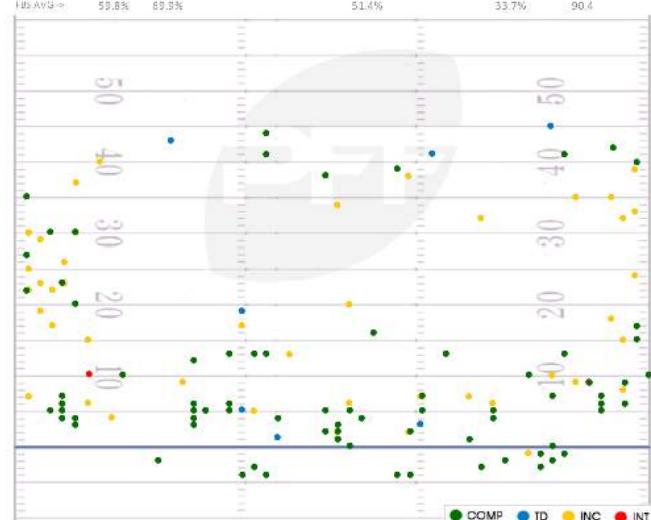

- Posted a WR rating of 150.3 in the middle of the field, second-best among FBS receivers with at least 35 targets.
- Led all FBS receivers with 4.58 yards per route against Power-5 conferences.
- Has good quicks after the catch and forced 22 missed tackles on 140 catches over the last two years.
- Dropped only 10 of 150 catchable targets over last two seasons.
- Adjusts well to off-target throws.
- Has the route-running ability to do damage in the slot.
- May not be much of a deep threat at the next level and caught only 38.7 percent of his deep targets last season, 112th in the nation.
- Ranked second in the nation with 383 yards in contested situations.

BOTTOM LINE:

Wilson has two solid years of production under his belt at Boise State, where he showed the skills to win on the outside or in the slot at the next level. He may not have the speed to be a true deep threat, but he did show well in contested situations. There are plenty of spectacular and off-target catches littered throughout his tape. Wilson is yet another complementary piece from this draft class, and his ability to line up in multiple roles should only help his cause.

OVERVIEW:

- Caught 55.0 percent of deep targets, tied for 16th-best among FBS receivers.
- Moves well for his size. Gains ground on corners off the line of scrimmage.
- Excellent catch radius. Attacks the ball in the air. Routinely makes off-target catches.
- Rounds his routes down the field.
- Varies the speed of his routes in order to create separation.
- Good feel for defenders and a tough runner after the catch. Forced 10 missed tackles on only 46 catches last season.
- Dropped six of his 52 catchable targets in his career.
- Only one strong year of production at Georgia.

BOTTOM LINE:

Another big target in this draft class, Wims has good straight-line speed and some nuance to his route running, though he doesn't always get in and out of his breaks cleanly. He has a number of highlight-reel catches on tape, as he uses his long frame and body control to routinely make off-target catches. If paired with an aggressive quarterback, Wims can be productive in contested situations and perhaps a bit more if he can clean up some of his route running.

TIGHT END

POSITION OVERVIEW

The theme of the tight end class is the pass game with a work-in-progress attitude toward run blocking. That's today's NFL, however, and the top end of the tight end class features two mismatch options in Oklahoma's Mark Andrews and South Dakota State's Dallas Goedert. Both big men can separate and create after the catch, with Goedert consistently putting highlight-reel catches on tape. Behind them are intriguing receiving options such as South Carolina's Hayden Hurst, UMass' Adam Breneman, and Penn State's Mike Gesicki. For teams looking for viable receiving threats at tight end, there are options to be had on the first two days of the draft.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Yards Per Route Run (TE)

Not satisfied with yards per catch or even yards per target as sufficient measuring sticks for receiving production, 'Yards Per Route Run' makes use of our detailed snap data that breaks down what each player was doing on each play. Total receiving yards is divided by the number of plays a receiver spent out in a pattern to give a mark to their per-snap contribution.

Drop Rate (TE)

Sticky fingers or hands of stone, the league's best (and worst) pass-catchers are highlighted in these tables. Adding up all of the catchable balls every player sees come his way and comparing it to the number that he can't haul in, the drop rate gives black-and-white backing to 'best hands/worst hands' arguments.

OVERVIEW:

- Ranked 3rd among draft-eligible tight ends with 1.93 yards per route.
- Caught seven deep passes in 2017, tied for 4th among FBS tight ends.
- Good speed and quickness as a route runner. Has the speed to stretch the seam.
- Caught only 3-of-10 contested targets.
- Works hard in the run game. Can sustain second-level blocks.
- Can locate and lock onto targets as a run blocker.
- Had an excellent showing during the week of Senior Bowl practice.
- Dropped 10 of 93 catchable targets in his career.
- Gets to top speed quickly after the catch. Averaged 6.4 YAC/reception during his four-year career.

BOTTOM LINE:

Akins is one of the more athletic tight ends in the draft, as he has the speed to stretch the field and do damage after the catch. He also shows the quickness to separate at the short and intermediate levels, making him a viable pass threat. Like most college tight ends, blocking is not a strength, but he's not afraid to mix it up and he can do damage on linebackers at the second level. Akins has potential to be one of the better pass-catchers in the class.

OVERVIEW:

- Excellent athlete, both before and after the catch.
- Good quickness for his size, allows him to separate and make defenders miss in space.
- Did a much better job of adjusting to off-target throws this season.
- Little experience as an in-line blocker and it shows with some ugly reps on tape.
- Can be used as a mismatch weapon all over the offense, either outside, in the slot, or in an H-back role.
- Ranked 5th among FBS tight ends with 2.63 yards per route.
- Led all FBS tight ends with 10 deep receptions and 318 deep receiving yards.
- Ran 81.4 percent of his routes from the slot, 3rd-highest among tight ends.

BOTTOM LINE:

Andrews was essentially a slot receiver at Oklahoma and he can fill multiple roles at the next level due to his athleticism and ball skills. Like most receiving tight ends in the class, he has work to do in the run game, but he's capable of lining up in the slot, out wide, or in an H-back role and creating mismatches for opposing defenses. Usage will be key, as Andrews works to improve as an in-line blocker, but he has the receiving skills to make an immediate impact.

OVERVIEW:

- Dependable receiver with excellent hands.
- Posted the nation's top receiving grade in 2016 at 90.8.
- Dropped only two passes on 136 catchable attempts over the last two years.
- Ranked 6th among draft-eligible tight ends with 1.82 yards per route.
- Good feel for getting open against zone and adjusting his route on scramble drill.
- Provides little after the catch. Forced only three missed tackles on 134 catches.
- Caught 60 percent of contested targets (12-for-20).
- Must improve as a run blocker after ranking 139th in the nation in 2016 and 130th in 2017.
- Loses far too many blocks quickly upon first contact.

BOTTOM LINE:

There's nothing particularly special to Breneman's game, though he catches on-target passes as well as any tight end in the class and he has a good feel for getting open against zone. His athleticism won't scare opposing defenses and he has work to do as a run blocker, but there's certainly a role for him as a dependable pass-catcher.

OVERVIEW:

- Solid route runner, can make plays at the intermediate level.
- Good catch radius.
- Doesn't have great athleticism but knows how to use his body and work the middle of the field.
- Plays right on the border of leveraging defenders and pushing off.
- Tied for 4th among draft-eligible tight ends with 1.87 yards per route in 2017.
- Caught 45.5 percent of contested targets.
- Dropped 12 of 147 catchable targets in his career.
- Provides little after the catch with only four career missed tackles on 135 catches and 3.8 YAC/reception.
- Continues to improves as a run blocker and can handle first contact. Gives his running back a chance.

BOTTOM LINE:

Fumagalli knows how the work the middle of the field, using his body and catch radius to move the chains. He's not a dynamic athlete, and it shows in his subpar after-the-catch stats, but he can be a useful option in the pass game at the short and intermediate level. He's improved every year as a run blocker and he's capable of at least holding up against stronger defensive players while also showing the ability to lock onto moving targets.

OVERVIEW:

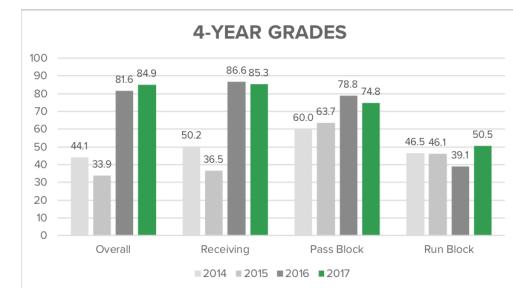

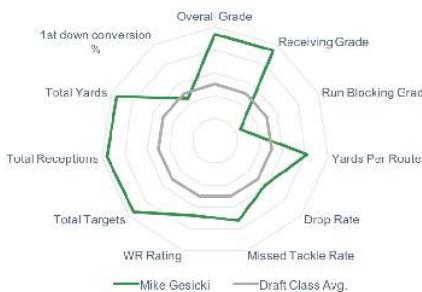

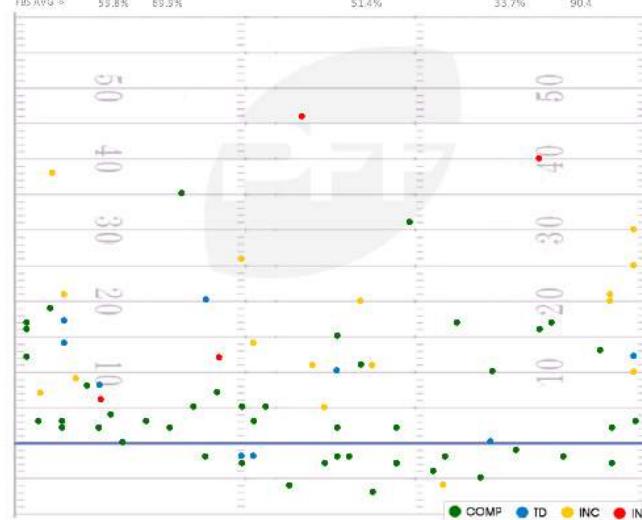

- Hauled in four touchdowns out of the slot, third-most among FBS tight ends.
- Uses his long frame to attack the ball. Good body control to adjust to off-target throws.
- Caught 75 percent of contested targets (9-for-12), best in the nation among tight ends.
- Long strides allow him to glide down the field.
- Inconsistent getting in and out of horizontal routes, but will flash some wiggle at the top of routes.
- Ranked 31st in the nation with 1.51 yards per route in 2017.
- Dropped 14 of 146 catchable targets in his career.
- Had one of the best weeks of practice among tight ends at the Senior Bowl.

BOTTOM LINE:

Gesicki's length stands out as he can get up the seam and he uses his frame to make off-target and contested catches. He can be a weapon in the middle of the field, but like many of the tight ends in this class, he'll have to be used in the right role in the run game. He struggles as an in-line blocker, but was capable enough when asked to block on the move. Gesicki is a mid-tier tight end in this class and he can work well with an aggressive quarterback willing to give him opportunities to win in tight windows.

OVERVIEW:

- Forced 12 missed tackles after the catch, tied for the first in the nation.
- Averaged 8.2 yards after the catch per reception.
- Mismatch weapon in the passing game and South Dakota State got him the ball in a variety of ways.
- Has the speed to be a vertical threat and the quickness to get off press and win on short routes.
- Body control allows him to make spectacular catches.
- Dropped five passes on 76 catchable targets last season.
- Had 206 run-blocking snaps from a traditional tight end position last season.
- Not powerful at the point of attack in the run game.
- Gets to the second level and can locate targets both from tight end or slot alignment.

BOTTOM LINE:

Goedert should challenge to be the top tight end off the board as he has a fantastic combination of size and athleticism. He moves like a wide receiver despite weighing 260 pounds and he'll be able to create mismatches at the next level from all over the formation. Goedert looked like a serviceable run-blocker at the FCS level, though he rarely had an opportunity to take on NFL-caliber defensive ends. He'll make his mark as in the pass game in the NFL, and his size and body control should make him a premier red-zone weapon.

OVERVIEW:

- Did not drop a pass on 43 catchable passes last season. Only dropped three of 103 catchable targets in his career.
- Good catch radius and body control. Went 7-for-11 on contested targets (63.6 percent).
- Has the speed to stretch the seam and the quicks to make defenders miss after the catch.
- Forced 14 missed tackles on 100 receptions in his career. Averaged 7.0 YAC/reception in his three years.
- Shows toughness running after the catch. Not afraid of contact.
- Run blocking is still a work in progress.
- Misses his target far too often when on the move in the run game.
- Can fly to the second level in the run game and has a few highlight-reel blocks to his name.

BOTTOM LINE:

Putting his age aside, Hurst's athleticism stood out on tape, as he has the speed to work the middle of the field and the quickness and toughness to make plays in the short game. He has potential to create mismatches in the slot or out wide, and he has plenty of experience in a 'move' tight end role in South Carolina's offense. He still has plenty of work to do in the run game, but he's serviceable in more of an H-back role. Hurst is right up there with the top pass-catchers in this draft.

OVERVIEW:

- Exaggerated route runner. Really tries to sell his breaks.
- Shows good agility on horizontal routes. Can separate at the break point.
- Lacks power at the point of attack in the run game.
- Shows the quickness to reach block and find targets when on the move as a run blocker.
- Has more in-line experience than most college tight ends. Ran only 35.1 percent of his routes from the slot in 2017.
- Caught 76.9 percent of his slot targets, 4th-best in the FBS last season.
- Caught 8-of-13 contested targets (61.5 percent)
- Forced only 12 missed tackles on 174 career receptions.
- Dropped 14 passes on 188 catchable targets in his career.

BOTTOM LINE:

Serigne had a productive four-year career at Wake Forest and he has the route-running ability to be an effective pass-catcher at the next level. He shows some quicks on horizontal routes and he can do damage from multiple positions. He has plenty of experience in-line blocking, but still lacks power in the run game, but he may have the ability to make the necessary blocks on the edge in a zone scheme.

OFFENSIVE TACKLE

POSITION OVERVIEW

If you're looking for the can't miss, top of the draft, tackle prospect, this isn't the class for you. The good news is though, that you'll likely be able to find an immediate starter either towards the end of the first round or at the top of the second. There are a handful of tackles with the requisite size and athleticism for the position, but simply lack the polish.

Notre Dame's Mike McGlinchey, Oklahoma's Orlando Brown, Texas' Connor Williams, and Ohio State's Jamarco Jones all have multiple seasons of top-notch grading with the traits to match. The order with which you align them will have a lot to do with scheme and what you value at the position, but all four should be starters sooner rather than later.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Pass-blocking efficiency (OT)

Making full use of our snap data and pressure tallies, plays spent in pass protection are compared to the total number of quarterback disruptions allowed by each player. The pass-blocking efficiency (PBE) formula weighs sacks a bit heavier than hits and hurries and produces a rating that reflects the most efficient pass blockers on a per-pass-blocking snap basis with scores closer to 100 being best. We've got these ratings available for full Offensive line units and individually for tackles, guards, centers, tight ends, and running backs.

2015	979	522	457	11	5	1	13

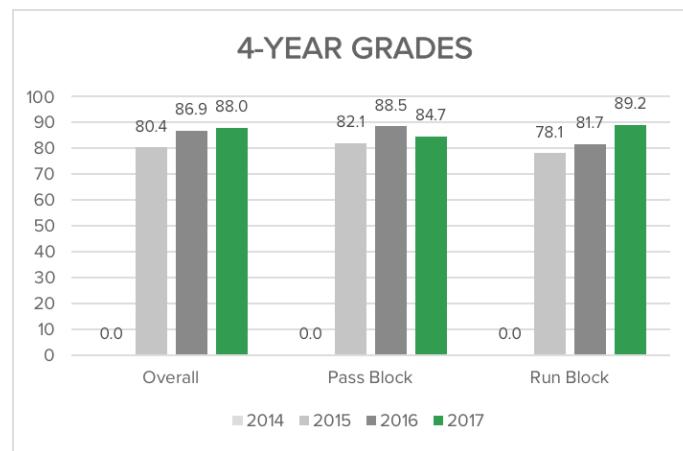

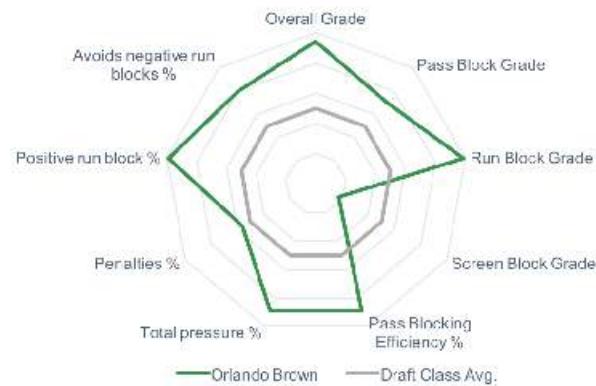

OVERVIEW:

- As large a human being as you'll see on a football field. Brown engulfs smaller edge defenders.
- Impressive length that he knows how to use to his advantage. Makes defenders run a long loop to the quarterback.
- Strength that you can't teach. Almost never ceded ground to a bull rush and wasn't getting taken into the backfield on runs.
- Slow footed. Simply can't mirror at a high-level because of his weight. Looks like he's running in mud on pulls.
- Inconsistent with technique from snap to snap.
- Possibly scheme limited with his movement ability. Not a guy you want playing in space too often.

BOTTOM LINE:

Brown's highest levels makes you think he's a future All-Pro, but his lowest ones give you pause about him matching up with NFL-caliber athletes. In the right scheme though, it will be easy to fall in love with Brown and his sheer physical prowess. You hope he can lean out in an NFL training facility and get some quickness back in his game.

2015	911	425	486	10	3	1	15

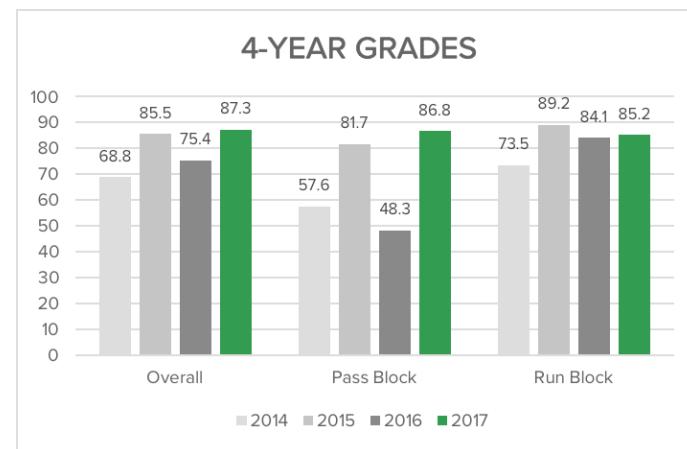

OVERVIEW:

- Multiple seasons of elite grades at both right and left tackle.
- Thick, strong tackle who owns a power advantage against almost every defensive lineman he faced.
- Run blocks with a mean streak. When his hand placement is on point he buries defensive linemen.
- Feet are slow and mirroring ability suffers as a result. Made a living off his strength and ability to snatch defenders in pass pro.
- Rarely took true pass sets at Oregon. Keeps hands wide and gets grabby when he did.
- At his best when he can play straight ahead. Could be scheme limited in the NFL. Not great in space.

BOTTOM LINE:

Crosby isn't going to win any beauty contests with his play style, but he got the job done at a high level at Oregon. It's encouraging that he showed well in pass protection 1-on-1s at the Senior Bowl, with a 67 percent win rate, considering his pass sets at Oregon were underdeveloped. His quickness could even see teams value him as a guard at the next level.

2015	50	14	36	0	0	0	0

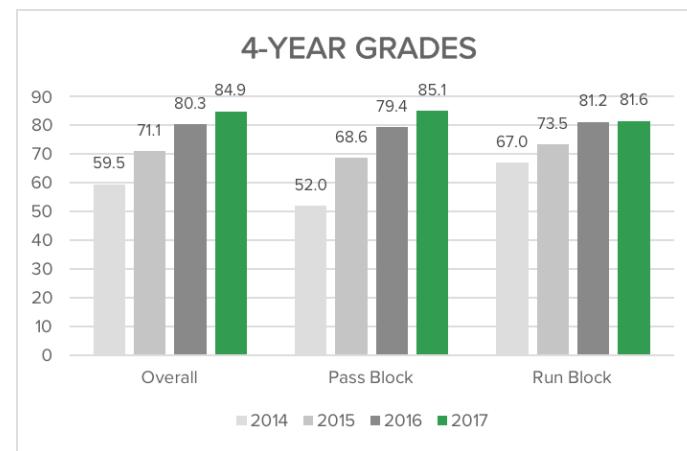

OVERVIEW:

- Well built, strong tackle with two-years of starting experience coming off a breakout season in 2017.
- Only allowed 11 total pressures this past season.
- Adept independent hand usage in pass protection. Long arms that he knows how to use.
- Great depth out of his kick slide for a big man. Didn't take a ton of true pass sets, but already looks well developed in that regard.
- Doesn't play with consistent leverage. Won't always sink hips on contact in run game instead opting to lurch into blocks.
- Gets off-balance easily and doesn't always play under control.

BOTTOM LINE:

Jones has all the tools to play tackle at the next level, but he's not a finished product yet. His pass sets are a thing of beauty and he should only improve with more experience in an NFL passing game. He rarely flashed dominant potential, but you don't need to be a dominant run blocker to be a high-level tackle in today's NFL.

OVERVIEW:

- Initial punch is completely deadening when it lands. Long arms with the strength to stop defenders in their tracks.
- Slow feet that struggle mirroring any sort of quickness. Allowed 18 pressures in 247 pass-blocking snaps.
- Allowed two sacks, a hit, and three hurries in a dreadful performance against Mississippi this season.
- Struggles sustaining blocks. Even when he gets initial engage, he loses control of far too many blocks.
- Attacks blocks high in the run game and doesn't play with leverage as well as you'd like.
- Had some dominant blocks leading out in front of screens.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rankin improved from 2016 to 2017, but still graded out as a below-average college tackle this past season. He's likely not athletic enough to hold up on the outside in the NFL and is ultimately better suited for guard or center. Even there he's a project though, as his hands aren't good enough to draft highly there.

OVERVIEW:

- Three-year starter who graded out better every successive season of his college career.
- Waist bender. Gets himself in a lot of bad situations because of that and is easily knocked off balance.
- Strong hands that won't let go once he's locked on. Easily his biggest strength.
- Plays with hands low and wide. Very inconsistent with his punch and technique.
- Needs to add a good deal of strength to play in the NFL and it's unclear if he'll ever get there.
- Feet can be a nightmare in times in pass pro. All over the place.

BOTTOM LINE:

McDermott's development has been encouraging, but he's still some ways away from being an NFL tackle. He has the size of one, but not the strength or athleticism. He'll have an uphill climb to ever start in the league and may ultimately be a guard.

2015	835	438	397	5	0	2	15

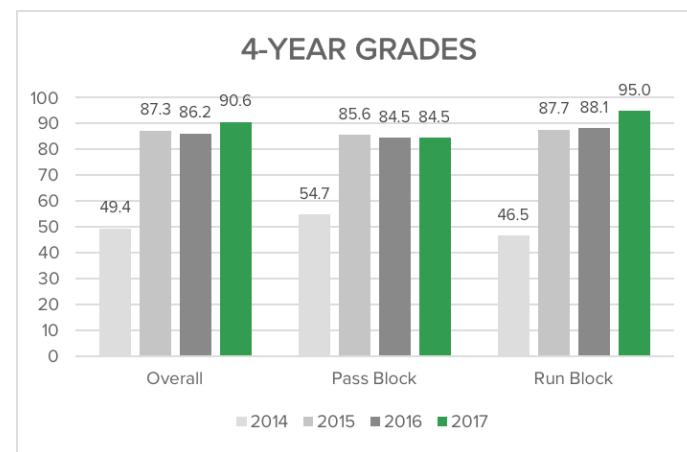

OVERVIEW:

- Looks the part in every regard. Size, length, strength, and athleticism are all top notch.
- Has graded extremely well every single year of his career. Even after making the switch from right to left tackle.
- Had some dominant outings. Two of his four highest-graded games this season came against extremely talented fronts of USC and NC State.
- Formed the best double team combo in the country with left guard Quenton Nelson. Moved DTs multiple yards off ball almost every time.
- Inconsistent with his punch in pass protection. Had his hands swatted away far too easily at times.
- Carries hands low in pass sets and leaves his chest open. Will be susceptible to bull rush in NFL.

BOTTOM LINE:

McGlinchey is as clean as any tackle prospect in this class, but there are a handful of things on his tape that still are concerning. He has a lot more decisive losses than you'd like from a tackle you're taking at the top of the draft and his traits aren't necessarily 'elite.' He still figures to be a high pick who can start at either tackle position from day one.

2015	577	338	239	3	1	2	19

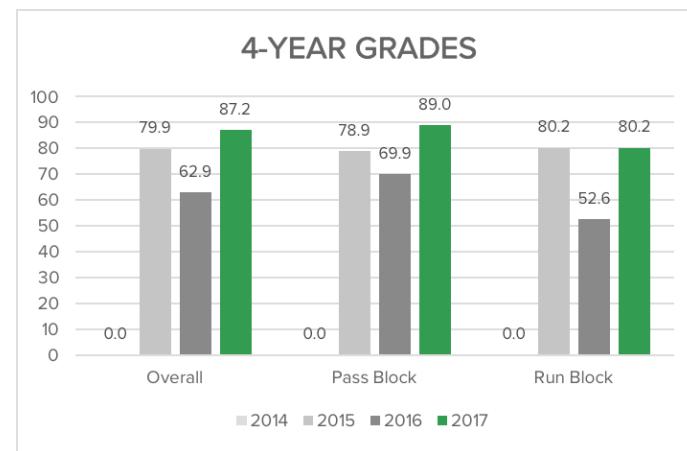

OVERVIEW:

- Size, length, and build of an NFL tackle.
- Good enough athlete to get out and move in the run game. Not scheme limited.
- Plays high and isn't strong enough to make up for it. Can get rocked into the backfield.
- Very wide feet in pass protection. Feet can stop on contact and he struggles to recover.
- Solid hand usage in the running game. Consistent with his placement.
- Good awareness of stunts and blitzes in pass protection.

BOTTOM LINE:

Miller looks the part of an NFL tackle, but his strength and athleticism don't get evaluators particularly excited. He took a big step forward this past season and was one of the most effective pass protectors in college football. He'll need to add a good deal of strength to be a plus pass protector at the NFL level.

OVERVIEW:

- Looks the part from a size and length perspective. Moves like an athlete when he's out in space.
- Slow out of stance and chasing from backside on zone plays.
- Lackadaisical punch in pass protection. Long arms, but doesn't yet know how to use them to his advantage.
- Lacks a mean streak. Possesses rare physical traits, but almost never saw him impose his will on defenders.
- Feet get all over the place in pass protection. Gets himself in bad situations too often.
- Strong upper body that can toss and ragdoll defensive linemen.
- Three-year starter with experience at both tackle spots.

BOTTOM LINE:

Okorafor is nothing more than a project at this point. He's not ready to step on an NFL field day one, but could be a few years down the line if he puts it all together. Only earned an average 76.4 grade this past season against MAC competition. His game will need to be built from the ground up at the next level.

2015	833	401	432	3	5	1	20

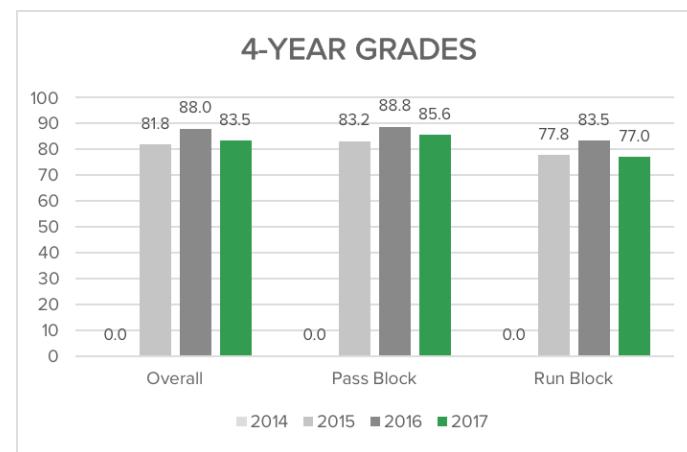

OVERVIEW:

- Fantastic athlete for the position. Moves about as well as any tackle in this class.
- Mirrors extremely well. Can get out of his stance quickly and maintain favorable relationship with edge rushers.
- Punch in pass pro does him no favors. Weak and easily slapped away by defenders.
- Was awful in Senior Bowl 1-on-1s. Only won 27 percent of his reps throughout the week.
- Play strength is nothing special. Not a people mover. Likely zone scheme limited.
- Oversets at times and is susceptible to inside counters.

BOTTOM LINE:

After a dominant 2016 season where he allowed all of four pressures all year, O'Neill took a step back in 2017. His Senior Bowl performance is incredibly worrisome, as he was dominated by the better competition. He'll need to add strength to have a chance of starting early in the league.

OVERVIEW:

- Elite athlete for tackle position. Can execute any block asked of him.
- Has been a dominant college tackle from the first day he stepped on the field. Allowed all of four hurries his sophomore season in 2016.
- Took a bit of a step back in 2017 and played only 332 snaps through injuries.
- Very few true pass sets in Texas' offense. Still a work in progress in that regard.
- Well-proportioned for his size. Carries 300-plus pounds with ease. Strong frame throughout.
- Hand placement in the run game is fantastic. Gets hands inside play after play.
- Doesn't get enough depth consistently in his pass sets.

BOTTOM LINE:

Williams has multiple seasons of production as one of the top tackles in college football. If he would have been able to come out in the draft a season ago, he'd likely go higher than he will now after disappointing this past season. Still, Williams has high-level traits and grading that make him a day one prospect.

OFFENSIVE GUARD

POSITION OVERVIEW

This is arguably one of the strongest position groups in the entire class when you add in possible tackle converts. Even after Notre Dame guard Quenton Nelson – who may be the top overall player in this entire class – there are a handful of players who should be able to step in and start immediately.

There's also someone for every scheme. Whether you want a powerful downhill run blocker like Will Hernandez or a swift technician in a zone scheme like Isaiah Wynn, this class has it all. There's a fairly stark drop off after the first handful of players, so teams looking for guard help should do so quickly.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Pass-blocking efficiency (OG)

Making full use of our snap data and pressure tallies, plays spent in pass protection are compared to the total number of quarterback disruptions allowed by each player. The Pass-blocking efficiency (PBE) formula weighs sacks a bit heavier than hits and hurries and produces a rating that reflects the most efficient pass blockers on a per-pass-blocking snap basis with scores closer to 100 being best. We've got these ratings available for full offensive line units and individually for tackles, guards, centers, tight ends, and running backs.

2015	721	374	347	3	3	2	6

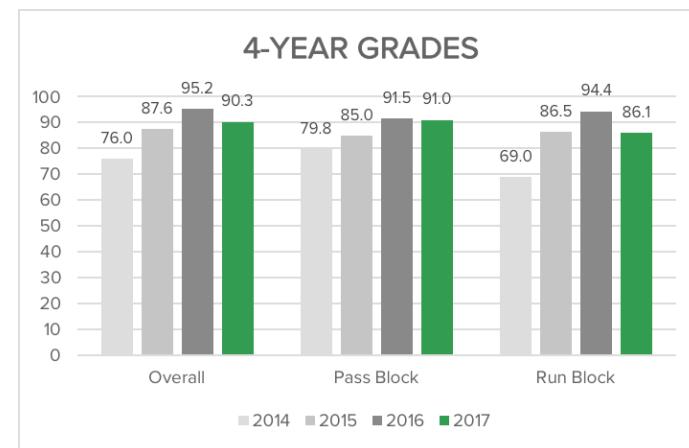

OVERVIEW:

- Truly dominated the competition at UTEP. His 95.2 overall grade in 2016 is the highest single season grade we've ever given to a guard.
- Has the anchor of an aircraft carrier. Good luck bull rushing him. Allowed all of four pressures in the past two seasons combined.
- Not infallible in pass protection though. Struggled with speed and when defensive tackles got into his shoulder pads at the Senior Bowl.
- Thickly built frame from top to bottom. Fire hydrant who out-muscled every single player he went against.
- Iffy locating in space. When he gets a clear line of sight and can deliver a blow, it's scary.
- Slow footed. Can stop his feet in pass protection and fails to recover when taken off balance.

BOTTOM LINE:

Hernandez is such a fun prospect to evaluate because his strengths and weaknesses are so well defined. He's a certified people mover who will be a weapon on double teams from day one. Hernandez isn't the most fleet of foot, however, and would be best suited in a gap scheme that asks him to fire off the ball.

2015	1035	808	227	8	5	4	29

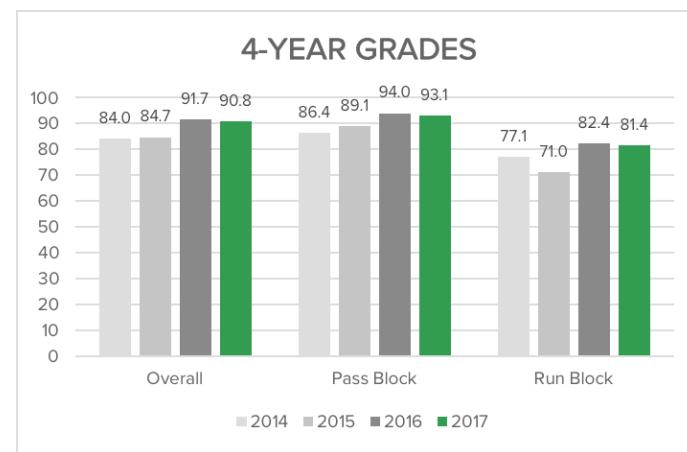

OVERVIEW:

- One of the best track records in pass protection of any tackle in the class grade-wise.
- The pass sets at Washington State aren't the same as he'll be taking in the NFL. Will have to be completely reworked.
- Good feet and mirror. Rarely got himself into bad situations.
- Athleticism overall is poor. Showed up a lot in the screen game where he struggled to locate.
- Plays high far too often and can get bowled over because of it. Very susceptible to the bull rush.
- Projection in the run game. Barely utilized at Washington State and concepts/technique weren't what he'll be running in NFL.

BOTTOM LINE:

Madison has already shown to be proficient in pass protection throughout his career, but there's a lot of question marks about whether it will translate to the NFL level. His strength and overall athleticism are below-average for NFL tackles and he projects better as a guard.

2015	721	374	347	3	3	2	6

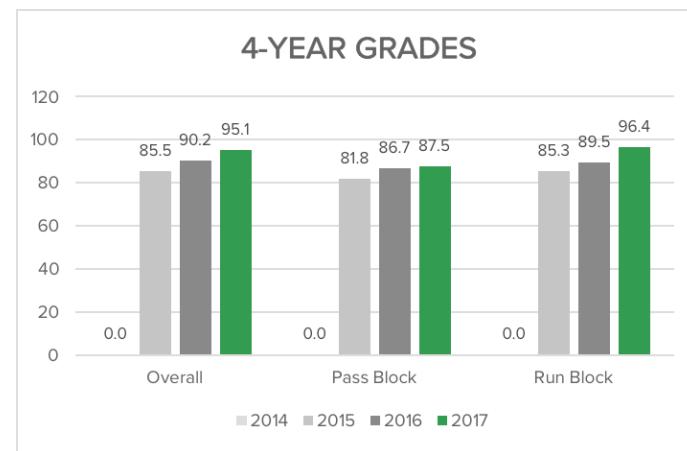

OVERVIEW:

- Far and away the highest-graded guard in college football this past season with a 95.1 overall grade. Graded above 90.0 in 2016 as well.
- Plays to the whistle snap after snap. Never met a block he didn't want to finish with the defender on the ground.
- Flashes power at the line of scrimmage as well as on pull blocks. Can generate movement off the line of scrimmage on nearly any type of block.
- Freakish blend of athleticism and flexibility. Wins the leverage battle regularly.
- Natural aggression can be detriment at times when he gets overextended trying to deliver a blow.
- Pass sets look like instant replays. Technique is consistent snap after snap with a deadening, quick punch.

BOTTOM LINE:

The most dominant offensive line process in our four years of PFF College. Could legitimately play tackle at the next level, as the only reason he started at guard in the first place was because Notre Dame had future first rounders at both tackle positions (Ronnie Stanley and Mike McGlinchey).

2015	881	334	547	5	0	5	5

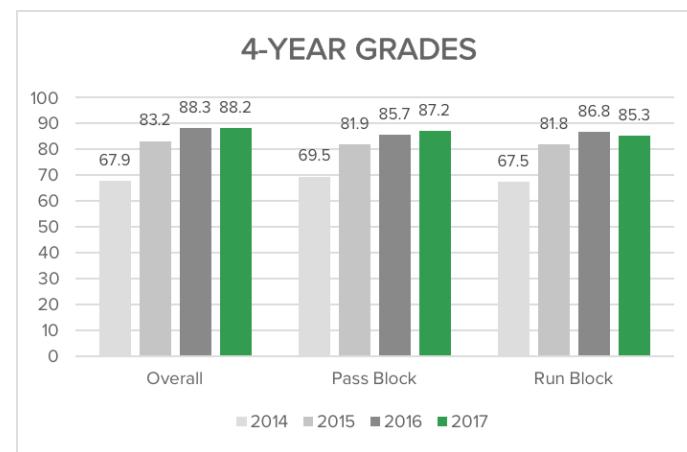

OVERVIEW:

- Plays angry. Feet never stop churning and plays consistently to the whistle.
- Has a constant forward lean. Gets off-balance on contact too often because of it.
- Has a hitch in his giddy-up when coming out of his stance on pulls.
- Looks unnatural in space. Choppy with his feet and slower to locate than you'd like.
- Strong as an ox. Regularly moves the line of scrimmage even on 1-on-1 blocks.
- Late reacting in pass pro on blitzes and stunts.

BOTTOM LINE:

Smith is a home run hitter type of guard who will alternate dominant reps with whiffs. You can't teach his strength though, and he's going to be drafted highly because of it. He's far from a perfect prospect, but he's an easy projection with how advanced he is as a run blocker already.

2015	900	444	456	8	3	3	13

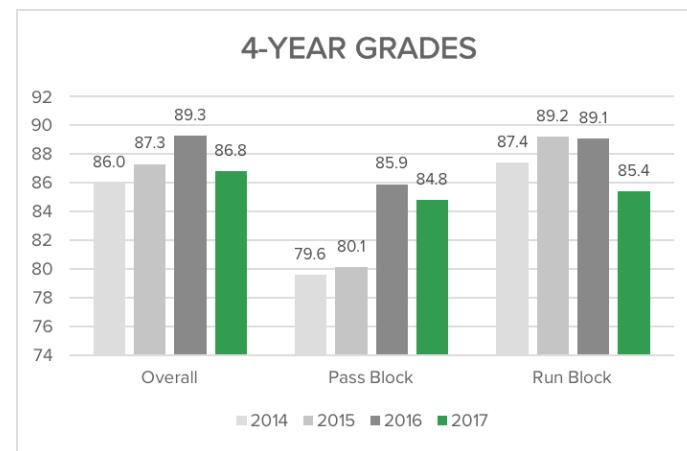

OVERVIEW:

- Bulldozer in the run game. Had some of the most impressive blocks in the country this year. Destroyed some defenders.
- A little tight in the hips. Really shows up when asked to change directions.
- Ducks his head into blocks far more than you'd like. Can be impatient in pass pro.
- When he gets his hands inside a defender's shoulder pads it's game over. He's not letting go.
- As powerful a guard as you'll see in a compact frame. Was running with defensive tackles at times.
- Can get a narrow base in pass protection that causes balance issues.

BOTTOM LINE:

Teller has been one of the highest-graded guards in the country for four straight seasons now, but it's concerning that he took a slight step backwards as a senior instead of taking his game to the elite-level. The level of play he's sustained throughout his career though is hard to ignore, and he's got all the tools to succeed in the NFL.

2015	772	347	425	6	2	2	6

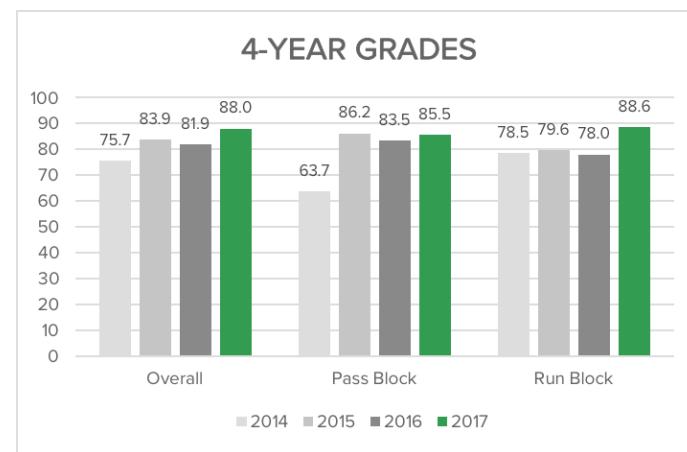

OVERVIEW:

- Undersized tackle who likely profiles to the interior in the NFL.
- Still got the job done in pass protection despite his height. Only allowed five pressures all season long and 26 in 2,609 snaps for his career.
- Dominated the week at the Senior Bowl. Was highest-graded player in 1-on-1s and he only lost two reps.
- Extremely consistent. Plays under control snap after snap.
- Very polished already. Could step in and start from day one.
- Plays with solid natural leverage. May not be the strongest, but still generates movement.

BOTTOM LINE:

Wynn is one of the most talented offensive line prospects in this draft. He'll have to make the transition from tackle to guard or center, but the track record of players successfully making that switch is so vast that it's not even a point of concern. He's an incredibly clean prospect otherwise and should be taken highly as a result.

CENTER

POSITION OVERVIEW

This year's center class has a decidedly middle-American feel. The Big Ten and SEC produced nearly every top center prospect in this class. Will Clapp (LSU), Frank Ragnow (Arkansas), James Daniels (Iowa), Mason Cole (Michigan), and Billy Price (Ohio State) should be among the first five in this class off the board and all three are coming off highly-graded seasons. Considering only six college centers were even drafted last year, having five quality options in this class is a good thing for teams in need.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Pass-blocking efficiency (C)

Making full use of our snap data and pressure tallies, plays spent in pass protection are compared to the total number of quarterback disruptions allowed by each player. The pass-blocking efficiency (PBE) formula weighs sacks a bit heavier than hits and hurries and produces a rating that reflects the most efficient pass blockers on a per-pass-blocking snap basis with scores closer to 100 being best. We've got these ratings available for full Offensive line units and individually for tackles, guards, centers, tight ends, and running backs.

OVERVIEW:

- Great natural leverage. Comes out of stance low and under control.
- Below average athlete. Really shows when asked to get out and pull the edge and locate. Noticeable hitch in his pull.
- Experience at both guard (2016) and center (2017), but size profiles best to center in the NFL.
- Short-arms and struggles to maintain engage with longer defensive tackles. Issue in both run and pass game.
- Rarely takes opposition off the line of scrimmage. Wins mostly via control rather than brute force.
- Never looked overmatched by an opponent at the college level. No poorly graded games over last two seasons.

BOTTOM LINE:

Allen has been one of the best offensive linemen in college football each of the past two seasons, but he doesn't check a ton of NFL boxes physically. Allen is an undersized center who doesn't quite have the athleticism to make up for the lack of strength. As technically sound as he is, Allen is still a solid option later in the draft.

2015	75	25	50	1	0	0	0

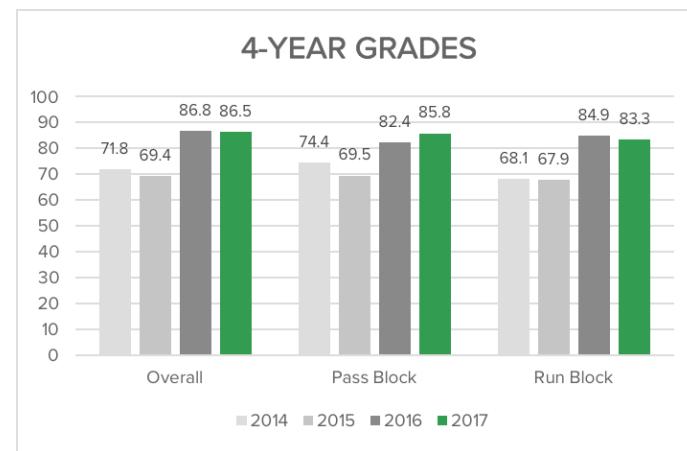

OVERVIEW:

- Lynchpin to one of the best offensive lines in football over the past couple of seasons.
- Technician with his hand placement. Great independent hand usage in run and pass game.
- Only allowed 10 total pressures in his college career (2,220 total snaps).
- Core strength isn't great. Can get flat-backed fairly easily by defensive tackles 1-on-1.
- Plodder. Likely scheme limited at the next level with his lack of athleticism.
- Can get knocked off balance far too easily. Seemed to be always on the verge of falling on his face.

BOTTOM LINE:

Bozeman is going to have an uphill climb to ever become an NFL starter with his athleticism. He got the job done for multiple seasons in the SEC though and it didn't seem to a huge hindrance there. Bozeman has the size to play either guard or center and that versatility will be looked favorably upon in the NFL.

2015	751	304	447	4	0	3	8

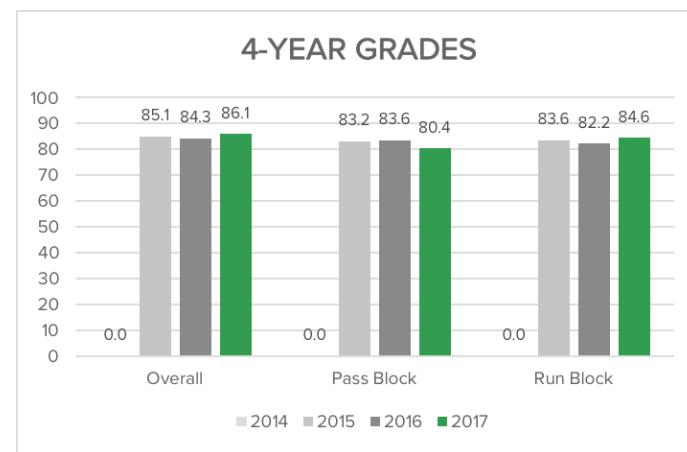

OVERVIEW:

- Experience in a pro-style scheme at LSU playing both guard and center.
- Three straight seasons of quality grades playing against top quality competition.
- Very consistent with his technique already. Almost robotic in the way he goes about his business.
- Plays very much under control. Rarely overextends himself or ends up on the ground.
- Lacking high-level physical traits. The dominant blocks are few and far between.
- Well-timed punch in pass protection. Hardly any whiffs on tape. Only eight pressures allowed this past season.

BOTTOM LINE:

Clapp was and extremely solid if unspectacular player for LSU over the past three seasons. He has the ability to play both guard and center while maintaining a high level of play. The only thing he's lacking is the 'wow' factor at this point because he checks a ton of other boxes to be a starting interior offensive lineman in the NFL.

2015	881	468	413	4	4	8	16

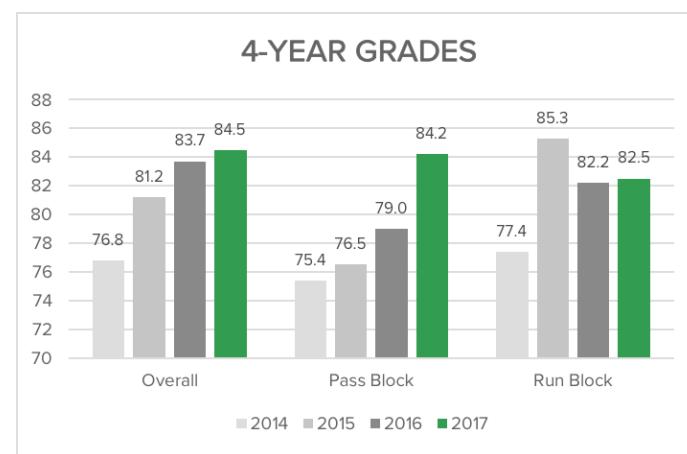

OVERVIEW:

- Four-year starter who bounced back and forth between left tackle and center throughout his career.
- Coming off the best season of his career in 2017, where he allowed a total of 17 pressures at left tackle.
- Got torn apart by Nick Bosa and Ohio State this past season. Exposed weak punch in pass protection.
- Hails from pro-style running game at Michigan that asked him to execute numerous different blocks.
- Ducks into blocks with wide hands. Struggles to maintain a clean engage as a result.
- Nothing special strength wise. Not a line of scrimmage mover by any means.

BOTTOM LINE:

Likely best suited to be a center in the NFL, Cole could play guard and maybe even tackle in a pinch as well. That versatility will be coveted, but not enough to warrant a high draft pick. He may not be a super exciting prospect, but he's fairly clean and has a huge body of work to evaluate off of.

2015	252	109	143	2	2	2	5

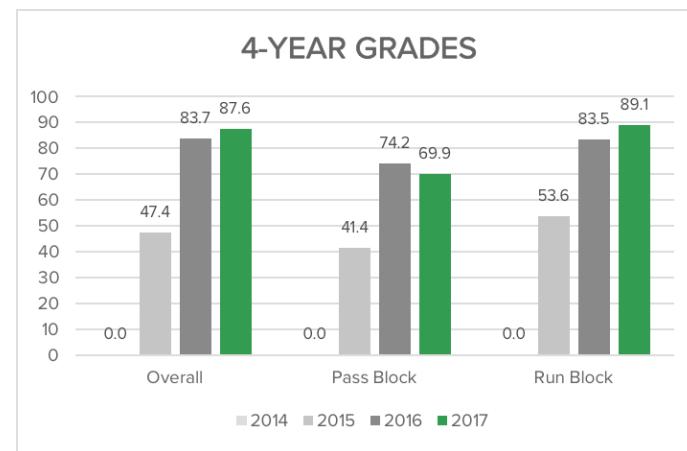

OVERVIEW:

- Very productive center. Hails from an Iowa offense whose concepts closely mirror that of NFL offenses.
- Consistently under control. Patient almost to a fault at times. Great feel for zone blocking scheme.
- Not much of a people mover. Taken into the backfield more than you'd like to see from a college center.
- Play strength overall can be issue, as he struggled with bull rush at times.
- Locating linebackers was an adventure for him at times. Once he gets moving in space, he really struggled to change directions.
- Biggest pass pro issue was recovering to the looper on stunts. Feet and reaction time both slow. Allowed 10 pressures this past season.

BOTTOM LINE:

Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz called Daniels the most NFL ready center he's ever coached. That's high praise with the linemen Iowa has put out and the grades back it up. He's been one of college football's best centers each of the past two seasons. Daniels is far from a perfect prospect, but he's close enough to step in and contribute on an NFL field next season.

OVERVIEW:

- Has played all three interior positions at some point in his career at Ohio State. LG as freshman/sophomore. RG as junior. C as senior.
- Nastiness that offensive line coaches love. Is out for blood on every snap.
- Very active hands. Even when he doesn't get initial placement perfect, he's quick to reset and regain control.
- Overextends in pass protection for his punch. Lots of quick losses in pass protection as a result. Speed gives him problems.
- Aggressiveness gets him in trouble in run game as well. Always looking for the kill shot.
- Power is superb for the position. Can line up a target and take them yards downfield.

BOTTOM LINE:

Price is the rare four-year starter at a major college program and that itself is enough to get evaluators attention. He's far from a perfect prospect, though, as he's had inconsistencies on tape still this past season that you'd have hoped would be cleaned up by now. He alternates ugly blocks with dominant ones that NFL coaches will think they can harness every snap.

2015	868	409	459	5	0	4	15

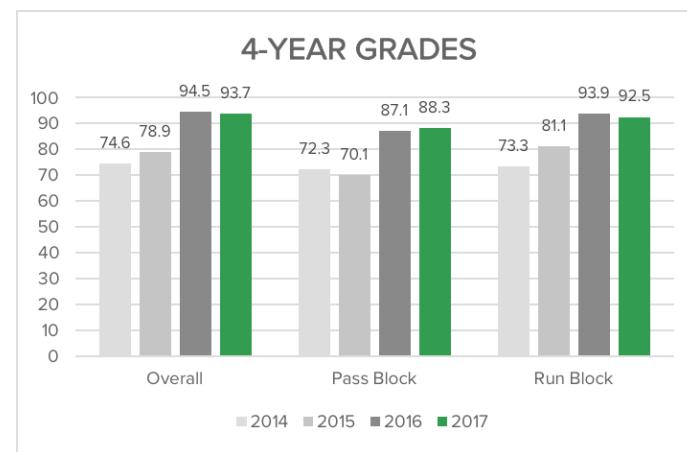

OVERVIEW:

- Consistently dominant on-field performance when healthy over the last two seasons. PFF's highest-graded center in 2016 & 2017.
- Some of the best hands of any offensive linemen in this class. Placement and strength are both consistently elite.
- Not going to be mistaken for Jason Kelce anytime soon, but is more than a capable athlete to play in any offensive scheme.
- Great feel for timing on combo blocks. Sprung a ton of big runs by climbing to pick off a linebacker at exact right time.
- Allowed all of 15 total pressures over the past two seasons.
- Feet can be slow to recover and could struggle with quicker linebackers and nose tackles at next level.
- Thing of beauty watching him fire off the ball 1-on-1 into a nose tackle. Play strength is top notch.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ragnow checks almost all the boxes one could want from a center other than his health (senior year ended with high-ankle injury). He's a three-year starter with dominant tape that has experience at both guard (2015) and center (2016 and 2017). The Arkansas center has also done it against top competition in the SEC and never once looked overmatched.

CORNERBACK

The top of the draft board when it comes to cornerbacks is perhaps the most interesting place to be compared to the relative certainty of other positions. Alabama's Minkah Fitzpatrick is the top player on many boards, but his prospects at cornerback are almost an entire projection given where he was deployed by the Tide – i.e. anywhere but outside corner.

Iowa's Josh Jackson is the next-best prospect with the highest PFF grade of 2017, but he came almost out of nowhere to post that season and was a ballhawking machine in the process.

After that there is an interesting mix of players that hit the NFL's desired height and length profile but have clear deficiencies in coverage or movement skills, and dramatically more agile players with better college tape that are smaller and less physical and thus will scare plenty of NFL teams.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Coverage (CB)

Reputation can scare opponents from challenging certain defenders, or it can put a target on the back of a cover man. That reputation can be well deserved or the product of unfounded hype. In order to cut through the noise, you need to see the numbers. This set of Signature Stats tallies all things coverage related, from snaps spent in coverage to yards after the catch on completions aimed at each defender.

The numbers for all linebackers and defensive backs when deemed the primary cover man are here and they add up to some never-before-seen measures (yards per cover snap, cover snaps per target, and cover snaps per reception) that will help you sort out who's getting the job done. To top it all off, as we did with the wide receiver rating, we've backcalculated the passer rating opponents produce when throwing at each defender.

Slot Performance (QB)

For another layer of depth in coverage data, we've sorted out the snaps spent covering the slot and applied the same calculations as we did in the overall coverage section. So, here you'll find who is spending the most snaps in that increasingly important nickel corner role as well as the targets they see and the receptions, yards, YAC, touchdowns, and interceptions they surrender from the slot.

OVERVIEW:

- Injuries limited his playing time in 2017, but when he was on the field his coverage numbers were phenomenal on very limited targets.
- Allowed a passer rating of just 17.7, and picked off or broke up more passes (six) than he allowed to be caught (five).
- The season before he had five interceptions and nine pass breakups to put himself on the map, but also surrendered six touchdowns.
- Most of the issues were in the red zone. He allowed just 46.7 percent of red zone passes to be caught in 2016, 45.3 percent over his career.
- May be seen as a slot corner as much as a perimeter corner, but played just 13 snaps inside in 2017, 61 the year before.
- Has excellent speed and athleticism, and can tick all of the movement boxes NFL teams will want to see.
- Can be outmuscled by bigger receivers.

BOTTOM LINE:

Jaire Alexander had an excellent 2016 season when it comes to playmaking, but also surrendered six touchdowns that year. His 2017 was derailed by multiple injuries, which limited him to only 314 total snaps, but he came back to play extremely well over the final three games, and his coverage numbers over that period are spectacular. Has the athletic measurables teams will want, and looks to have the skills to play inside or out at the next level. Frame and injury history may give some teams pause for concern, but the ceiling is high.

OVERVIEW:

- Allowed just one touchdown on 57 targets in 2017 and three scores across the last two years of play on 121 targets.
- Had just one interception over the past two seasons, broke up 11 passes.
- Didn't allow more than five receptions in a single game all season.
- Moves well and has solid athleticism, has an impressive track background, and that shows immediately on tape.
- Is not a big player, and needs that athleticism to match up to bigger receivers and win with movement rather than physicality.
- No major weaknesses to his play, but strengths are limited also, may struggle to find the traits that elevate him to the NFL level.
- Solid tackler, missed just four total tackles in his college career.

BOTTOM LINE:

Another Alabama defensive back hitting the draft this season, Anthony Averett has been solid if unspectacular for the Tide during his college playing time. He has fluid athleticism and speed, and can stick with receivers in man coverage, but struggles to play the ball and as a result has just one interception across 121 targets. Does everything pretty well but nothing to an elite level, and may struggle to translate that to a higher level of competition against bigger, stronger and faster athletes.

2015	798	44	7	6	13	72	40	55.6%	480	6	3	7	86.6

OVERVIEW:

- Big, tall CB who also elevates and challenges at the catch point extremely well. If he's in the vicinity, will make offenses work for the catch.
- Allowed just 49.1 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught in 2017, gave up just 361 receiving yards all year.
- Surrendered a passer rating of 76.1 thanks largely to picking off just one pass all season.
- He did have six pass breakups to go along with that pick, giving him 20 over the past three seasons.
- Had eight games in 2017 in which he allowed fewer than 20 receiving yards, including six of fewer than ten.
- Struggled down the stretch, with multiple bad games to the season, including the SEC Championship against Georgia.
- Missed just two tackles in 2017, missed 12 the year before.

BOTTOM LINE:

A tall, long corner with excellent size and physicality, Carlton Davis is what NFL teams are looking for right now. He has impressive strength to get disrupt receivers in press coverage and ride them down field, and has translated that into strong play in the run game. He challenges at the catch point very well, making receptions hard work, but doesn't pick many passes off. Had six penalties in 2017, and all were pass interference. Needs to dial back the contact at the next level, and can struggle in off-coverage.

2015	690	31	5	4	18	62	36	58.1%	310	4	2	6	79.4

OVERVIEW:

- Played just 13 snaps as a perimeter cornerback in 2017, the position that will hold the most value for him at the NFL level.
- Made 38 solo tackles in 2017, 23 of which were defensive stops, as he operated largely from the slot and around the line of scrimmage.
- Graded well in all facets of the game and had three-straight seasons of impressive PFF grades, culminating in an 84.8 mark this year.
- Wasn't beaten for a reception longer than 31 yards in 2017.
- Allowed an NFL passer rating of 83.5 on 61 targets in 2017, but that same stat was just 37.8 the season before.
- Has been a versatile and effective player for Alabama in multiple positions, and has top-level size and athleticism
- Teams will need to project him as a perimeter cornerback. The traits and talent are there, but the experience is not. Can he be Jalen Ramsey?

BOTTOM LINE:

Minkah Fitzpatrick is a playmaker anywhere he lines up on defense, but while that versatility was a plus in college, it presents a challenge to NFL teams looking to take him high in the draft, because they need to identify exactly where he plays at the next level. The position that holds the highest value – perimeter corner – is the one that he has the least experience playing (just 13 snaps in 2017). He has excellent instincts, strength and on field communication, and will likely succeed somewhere in the NFL, but what position?

OVERVIEW:

- A tall, long corner who has some impressive tape and measurables, but also maturity concerns and was suspended late in the 2017 season.
- Didn't allow a touchdown in 2017, but was beaten badly on a few plays that could easily have resulted in them.
- Had two interceptions and five pass breakups, allowed a passer rating of just 48.1 on 57 targets.
- Had solid grades against the run in his two biggest seasons of playing time, posting 18 defensive stops this past season.
- Struggles to live with receivers at the breaking point in the route and can allow significant separation even on deep passes, or grabs to prevent it.
- Played with an unconventional alignment at Texas on off-coverage zone plays that will likely be reworked at the next level.
- Had big games against top competition, surrendering just 18 yards to Oklahoma's James Washington on three targets.

BOTTOM LINE:

Holton Hill is another cornerback that fits the profile that NFL teams are looking for with exceptional size and length, but he is a significantly more flawed prospect than some other others in the class that tick those boxes. Hill also has significant maturity concerns and had the best season of his college career curtailed by suspension incurred by violating team rules. Has size and length, but can struggle at the breaking point in routes and needs work to realize his true potential. Likely to be a boom or bust candidate later in the draft.

OVERVIEW:

- Allowed an NFL passer rating of just 35.5 when targeted in 2017, surrendered only 273 yards in coverage all season.
- Did not allow a single touchdown in coverage all year, and had four interceptions and eight pass breakups.
- Was not beaten for a pass longer than 21 yards all season.
- Has just 1,049 snaps of playing time, 884 of which came this past season.
- Is under 6-foot tall but shows good strength and does not look like a player that will need to move inside to the slot.
- Played just 23 snaps in the slot in 2017, with 737 of his snaps at left cornerback.
- Looks to have blazing speed, which will help mitigate some of his relative lack of size, has helped him add value as a return man.
- Averaged 31.9 yards per kick return and 16.6 per punt return, scoring three times overall and grading well.

BOTTOM LINE:

Mike Hughes is an exceptionally talented corner who hits the NFL after one elite season at UCF. He played in 2015 for North Carolina before being suspended for violating team rules. He attended community college in 2016 before transferring to UCF and starring at left corner. His grade was excellent and coverage numbers fantastic, but his play is still a little raw and there may be more development to come. Will have value early as a return man in the NFL, but may take a season or two to fulfil his potential as a perimeter corner.

OVERVIEW:

- Has played extensively over the past two seasons, but took a huge leap forward in 2017, improving his grade each of the past two years.
- Allowed a passer rating of 80.1 in 2017, thanks largely to snagging just one interception, giving him just four in the past three years.
- Stands 5-foot-11 but is listed at just 175 pounds, and that lack of bulk shows up at times if players get their hands on him.
- Has played in the slot, with 270 snaps inside in 2017, which need to be his alignment in the NFL.
- Moves exceptionally well whether outside or in the slot and can change direction in an instant, and has elite straight-line speed.
- Doesn't have an exceptional feel for zone and understanding how to adjust his positioning. May be best suited to a man-coverage scheme.

BOTTOM LINE:

Donte Jackson has one of the most exciting athletic profiles in the draft, with elite speed and short area quickness. He is a slight build, but stands 5-foot-11 and could potentially play either outside or in the slot, giving NFL defenses the option of having him as a second or third corner early and kicking him inside to the slot in nickel packages. Hasn't made as many plays on the ball as his athleticism should have dictated, but his potential is intriguing and he could become an excellent man cover corner at the next level.

OVERVIEW:

- Allowed a passer rating of just 36.5 when targeted this season from 91 passes, the 5th-best mark in the class and best with that volume of targets.
- Allowed 40 receptions from 91 targets (44.0 percent), surrendering only 432 yards from the 2nd-highest target volume in the draft class.
- Surrendered four touchdowns on the season, but had eight interceptions and 18 pass breakups.
- Improved his overall grade significantly each of the past two seasons and his 96.2 overall grade is the best grade of the class.
- Was a ballhawk in 2017, contested plenty of receptions he didn't pick off. Got his hands on a lot of passes.
- Only 17 corners in the draft class surrendered more than the four touchdowns Jackson gave up this season.
- Only moved to cornerback in 2015, so is extremely young at the position

BOTTOM LINE:

Josh Jackson's grade in 2017 was off the charts, leading all corners not just this season, but it's the highest grade we've seen from any corner in this draft class in any year of their college careers. Jackson was a wide receiver in high school and only moved to corner in 2015, playing just 297 snaps over the first two seasons of his career as depth on the Iowa bench. In 2017 he started and had a huge season, picking off eight passes and breaking up another 18. Sample size is an issue, but the potential is huge.

OVERVIEW:

- Has the size and length that NFL teams are chasing, standing 6-foot-2, but is light and lanky in build.
- Inconsistent play at South Carolina, having some elite shutdown games and others where he struggled.
- Allowed a passer rating of 72.1 when thrown at in 2017, allowing 51.8 percent of the passes thrown his way to be caught.
- Was not beaten for a reception longer than 38 yards, but surrendered three touchdowns.
- Played at the Senior Bowl, where he struggled badly during the week of practice and gave up a 63-yard reception in the game itself.
- Allowed 70-plus yards in a single game four times in 2017, including back to back games to begin the season.

BOTTOM LINE:

A long cornerback with ideal NFL height and length, JaMarcus King is nevertheless a little underweight and has struggled for extended periods overall. At the Senior Bowl he was badly exploited in coverage during the week of practices, being beaten routinely in 1-on-1 drills before giving up a big play in the game itself. Can look a little lost within the defense at times and not always sure of what he is doing, but the measurable profile could get him looked at a little longer than if he were a few inches shorter.

OVERVIEW:

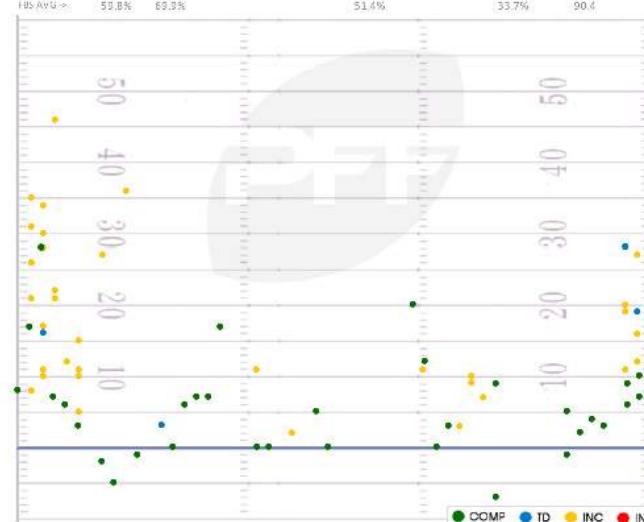

- Had eight interceptions in 2016, but none in the rest of his college career.
- Tightened up his coverage overall in 2017 despite failing to register the interceptions. Wasn't beaten for a catch longer than 34 yards all year.
- Allowed just 47.1 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught over his college career, but gave up 11 touchdowns on 140 targets.
- Long and physical, but struggles badly in space if he can't get his hands on the receiver and use his hands to re-route.
- Has flashed ball skills, but only in one season, and is more of an obstacle to receptions than a genuine ballhawking threat to an offense.
- Needs the right defensive scheme to protect his deficiencies and take advantage of his (literal) strength.

BOTTOM LINE:

A big cornerback with excellent size (6-foot-2) and length, Tarvarus McFadden has the ability to make impressive plays if he can turn his assignment into a physical encounter with a receiver. If he is asked to play in space or allows separation against speed he is in significant trouble and can be exposed badly. Surrendered 11 touchdowns over the past two seasons of play and gave up almost 13 yards per reception. Needs the right schematic fit to take advantage of his physicality and limit his exposure against speed.

OVERVIEW:

- Allowed two touchdowns over the season from 68 targets, surrendering 520 receiving yards at an average of 11.5 per reception.
- Had two interceptions and only four additional pass breakups, yielded a passer rating of 91.5.
- Has impressive movement skills in off coverage for a corner of his size, and has had solid games against tough competition.
- Has improved his overall grade in each of the past two seasons, ending with an 84.4 overall grade in 2017.
- Playing time also increased in each of the past two seasons, and for his three-year college career has been on the field for 2,135 snaps.
- Will have to buck the recent trend of Stanford defensive backs that have struggled at the next level.
- Had six games in 2017 with fewer than 20 receiving yards surrendered, including the Pac-12 championship and bowl game.

BOTTOM LINE:

Quenton Meeks is working against a recent history of Stanford defensive backs that have struggled at the NFL level, but he does have the physical stature that teams covet. Moves well in space for a player of his size, but can struggle to be as physical as he should be. Has been solid, not spectacular in coverage over the past couple of seasons, but does give up occasional big plays and will need to rely on more potential than proven production.

OVERVIEW:

- A tall corner who has the kind of physical dimensions that NFL teams are looking for, Oliver has impressive radius to challenge for the ball.
- Allowed just 43.6 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught after allowing just 43.1 percent the season before.
- Has just three interceptions over the past two seasons, but has 17 pass breakups to go along with those picks.
- Can struggle to control his larger frame and gets out of control when at full speed – leads to being shaken at times by shiftier receivers.
- Has allowed catches longer than 40 yards in every season of his college career, including one of 52 yards in 2017.
- Isn't assertive as a run defender, choosing too often to just occupy the right space rather than attacking to finish the play.
- Follows in the footsteps of former teammate Ahkello Witherspoon, who had similar style and skills and flashed ability as a rookie for the 49ers.

BOTTOM LINE:

Isaiah Oliver has the body type that NFL teams covet in 2017, with the size, speed and length to be able to play man coverage on the outside and challenge for any deep ball. That body type does cause him problems at times when throttling down and changing directions at speed, but his talent is evident. Will remind many of his former teammate Ahkello Witherspoon, who was drafted a year ago in the third round and flashed plenty of ability as a rookie in San Francisco. May not be a star right away, but has huge potential.

OVERVIEW:

- Had four straight solid years of PFF grading, with his best season coming back in 2015 as a sophomore for Western Michigan.
- That sophomore season was his first season playing cornerback in college, and he had been a freshman wide out the year before.
- Allowed a passer rating of 75.1 in 2017, with three interceptions and 10 pass breakups from 50 targets.
- Has given up big plays, with receptions of at least 50 yards in each of his three seasons, and 13 touchdowns over 206 targets.
- Allowed fewer than 50 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught over his college career (49.5) despite playing WR in his freshman season.
- Has excellent speed and ball skills, but is undersized and weak both against the run and in coverage. Likely moves to the slot at the next level.

BOTTOM LINE:

Darius Phillips is an interesting story and prospect. He had four impressive seasons at Western Michigan, but one of them was at WR as a freshman before moving to the defensive side of the ball and playing extremely well for three seasons. Has performed well against top competition and adds value as a return man. His athleticism and ball skills are excellent, but his size and strength are a concern, and will likely restrict him to the slot at the next level. Gives up big plays to go along with those big plays of his own in coverage.

OVERVIEW:

- One of the smallest corners in the 2018 draft class, stands just 5-foot-9 and weighs 188 pounds.
- Had one of the best grades in the nation, allowed just 356 yards on the season from 64 targets.
- Has two seasons of excellent grading, and has graded well against the run in both seasons despite small stature.
- Didn't allow a reception longer than 30 yards in 2017, and surrendered a passer rating of 55.5 when targeted.
- Played almost exclusively at RCB, with 741 of his 785 snaps at that position.
- At his size will almost certainly need to play in the slot in the NFL, but saw just 13 snaps inside in 2017.
- Worst game in 2017 came against Texas Tech where he allowed 101 yards on 12 targets, with 98 of those yards coming against Dylan Cantrell.

BOTTOM LINE:

D.J. Reed is the prototypical small cornerback which means he faces an uphill battle heading into an NFL that has never been more interested in size and measurables. He is a feisty corner that does play with more physicality than his size suggests, but there are barely a hand full of corners that have even been given a shot on the perimeter at his size in the past decade. Reed's tape is outstanding, but his NFL future lies in either defying those odds or moving to the slot, where has not played extensively in college.

2015	913	45	11	8	14	69	31	44.9%	325	1	4	12	39.8

OVERVIEW:

- Three years of solid grading, but his best season actually came in 2015, an 89.2 grade that marginally edges 2017's mark of 87.9.
- Didn't have an interception in 2017, but did have eight pass breakups and allowed fewer than 50 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught.
- Has played multiple spots for North Carolina and demonstrated a varied skillset. NFL future could be as a slot/safety/matchup weapon.
- Had two sacks, three hits and two hurries from just 22 pass-rushing snaps on the blitz.
- Graded well in all facets of the game in 2017, and had excellent coverage grades in each of the past three seasons.
- May struggle with long speed to play perimeter corner in the NFL.

BOTTOM LINE:

Less of a true perimeter cornerback and more of a defensive back whose versatility should lend itself to a hybrid role in an NFL defense, M.J. Stewart has three excellent seasons of play at North Carolina. Stewart also played at the Senior Bowl and graded well during the week, but any NFL team will need to have a plan in terms of how to use him at the next level. He is a classic tweener player, but at a time where that role has in itself become a position in some defenses. Could make an early impact as a matchup weapon on defense.

2015	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0.0%	0	0	0	0	0.0

OVERVIEW:

- Had exceptional coverage numbers in his final season at Alabama, his first with significant playing time.
- Didn't allow a touchdown all season from 68 receptions.
- Allowed a passer rating of just 43.3 including the college playoffs.
- Gave up a catch on just 44.1 percent of passes thrown his way over the season.
- Wasn't beaten for a catch longer than 30 yards all year.
- Had a couple of ugly games in 2017, including against Auburn, where he missed two tackles and gave up 62 yards from four catches.
- Played at the Senior Bowl, where he struggled throughout the week of practice before allowing one catch for 31 yards on two targets in the game.
- Tall and long, but light build and can be bullied at times. Has beaten long odds to get to this position.

BOTTOM LINE:

A former walk on at Alabama, Wallace has gone from flag football to starting for the Crimson Tide in a national title game in three seasons. Just one year of extensive playing time, Wallace posted impressive grades and had 11 pass breakups in 2017. He's tall and has excellent movement skills, but very slight and can be bullied. Graded well this season, but struggled during practice at the Senior Bowl all week, and may struggle unless he can develop with more experience.

2015	21	1	0	0	0	0	0	0.0%	0	0	0	0	0.0

OVERVIEW:

- Allowed an NFL passer rating of 52.9 when targeted in 2017, with two interceptions and twelve pass breakups from 57 targets.
- Ward allowed just 35.1 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught, one of the best marks in the nation.
- Like all Ohio State corners, coached not to look for the ball, so tough to tell if those instincts exist, hence just two interceptions in 2017.
- Aggressive in man coverage and will need to dial down the contact levels at the next level, but was only flagged three times in college career.
- Played more man coverage than anything else for the Buckeyes, but had a good feel for zone coverage and made some nice plays on the ball.
- Occasionally missed tackles diving at players' ankles, but only fell off a total of 11 tackles over two seasons.
- Athletically gifted corner, who has the tools to become a top cover guy at the next level. Adjustment from Ohio State's technique a key variable.

BOTTOM LINE:

Denzel Ward is the latest in a line of Ohio State cornerbacks to hit the NFL draft. Like all Buckeyes cornerbacks, he has been coached to play a specific technique which will need adjustment in the NFL where contact rules are stricter, but he has the athleticism and tools to make that adjustment. He has outstanding coverage numbers and extensive experience in man coverage, but flashed a good feel for zone coverage and shouldn't be scheme-specific at the next level. One of the best pure cover corners in this draft class.

CB DARIOUS WILLIAMS

TEAM: UAB

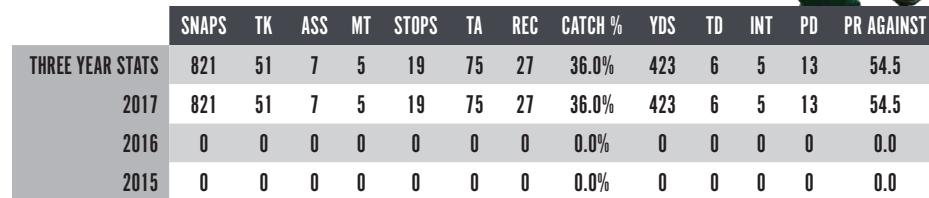

CL: RS-SR

HT: 5' 10"

2017 GRADE: 91.3

POS Rk: 10 WT: 180 LBS

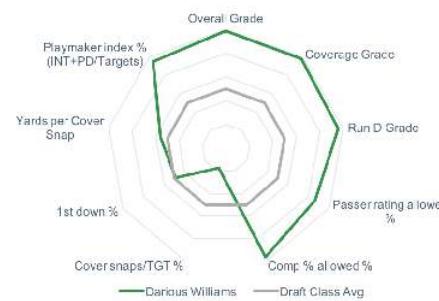

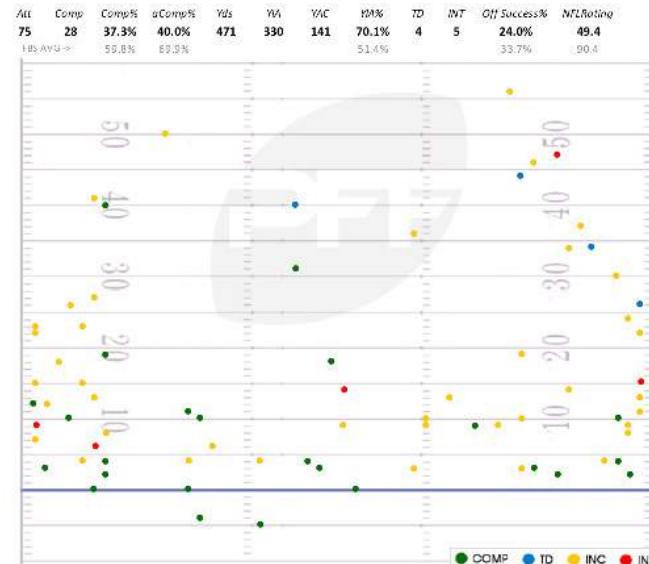

OVERVIEW:

- Former walk on for a UAB team that were briefly disbanded, Williams had one of the best grades in the nation in 2017.
 - Allowed a passer rating of just 38.9 when targeted in 2017, almost the same passer rating as just throwing the ball at the dirt every play.
 - Allowed just 31.9 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught, one of the lowest marks in the nation from 69 targets.
 - Surrendered four touchdowns, but picked off five passes and had 13 more pass breakups.
 - Is a smaller corner, and doesn't have blazing speed, so his future at the next level may be inside. Played just 46 snaps in the slot in 2017.
 - 18 defensive stops was a top-15 mark in the draft class, earning him solid grades against the run despite small stature.

BOTTOM LINE:

A small-school corner who is also small in stature, everything is working against Darious Williams except his 2017 tape. He was exceptional at making plays on the ball and also coming up strong in the run game. His timed speed will be important if he wants to play outside at the next level, and strength of competition is a concern, though against Florida he was thrown at seven times and did not allow a catch and broke up two passes. An intriguing name to watch who may have to move to the slot in the NFL.

2015	380	19	3	3	6	35	16	45.7%	222	1	1	3	64.2

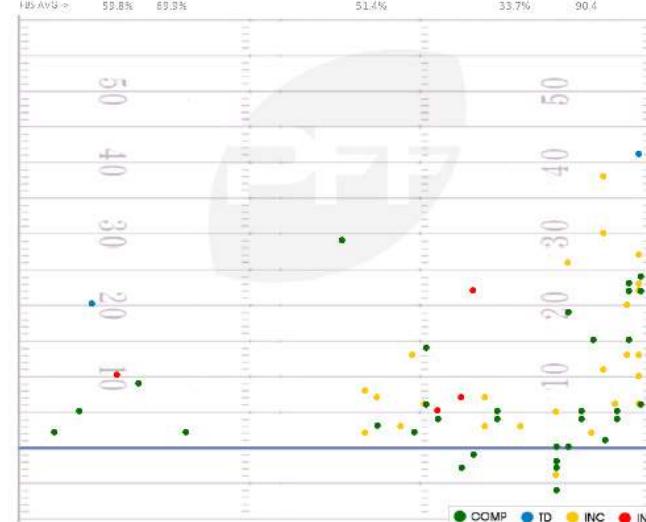

OVERVIEW:

- Big corner, but doesn't play like it consistently, often losing out for physicality while also struggling against quick movement.
- Allowed two touchdowns in 2017 from 66 targets, allowed 53.0 percent of passes thrown his way to be caught.
- Gave up an NFL passer rating of 70.4, picked off two passes and broke up another four.
- Played at the Senior Bowl and in the game itself, allowed no receptions from three targets.
- Didn't allow a reception in the bowl game against Iowa, and was not targeted in the game.
- Has played special teams extensively, with 146 special teams snaps over the season across multiple special teams phases. Will help him play early.

BOTTOM LINE:

Another corner that fits the height and length profile that NFL teams are looking for, Isaac Yiadom's quickest route to playing time in the NFL may be on special teams because he has extensive experience and playing time there while many other corner prospects do not. He flashes the plays that speak to big potential but can be exposed in almost all facets of the game and struggled badly against Notre Dame, particularly in space.

SAFETY

POSITION OVERVIEW

Beyond Derwin James, it's not a star-studded class of safeties. James has top-10 potential, as he can play any number of roles on defense after leading all safeties in PFF grading in both 2015 and 2017. He's a perfect defensive chess piece for a league that needs versatility more than ever. Beyond that is the usual helping of box safeties like Penn State's Marcus Allen, true free safeties like Ohio State's Damon Webb, and a few hybrids like Alabama's Ronnie Harrison.

For most of these safeties, their career will be determined by system and role, and we'll outline each player's strengths and weaknesses on the next few pages.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Run-Stop Percentage (S)

You finished with 120 tackles this year? That's great, but where did you make them? If a defender is racking up tackles but not keeping the offense from getting what they were after, how meaningful are they? For our run-stop percentage Signature Stat, we've combined our tackle totals (built from viewing games retrospectively and with the aid of a rewind button, so consider their accuracy a step beyond the inconsistent numbers you'll find in the unofficial 'official' stats), our run defense snap counts, and defensive Stops to produce this worthy look at individual run defense production.

Stops are what we judge to be tackles that prevent an offensive success (defined as gaining 40 percent of required yardage on first down, 60 percent on second down, and the entire required yardage on third or fourth) and making more of them per run defense snap will bump you on this list.

Tackling Efficiency (S)

Putting missed tackles into perspective, this Signature Stat not only boils all of the tackling data down to a simple 'attempts per miss' number, it also separates out the tackling efficiency of all linebackers and defensive backs on the snaps they've spent in run defense and pass defense.

OVERVIEW:

- Attacks downhill in the run game. Classic box safety.
- Finishes plays with good power.
- Ranked 6th in the draft class with a run-stop percentage of 7.7 when lined up within eight yards of the line of scrimmage.
- Run-stop percentage of 8.3 when lined up in the box ranked 5th in the nation in 2016.
- Limited range at free safety. Can hold his own in split safety looks.
- Not a great coverage player, but handles curl/flat responsibilities well.
- Missed 39 tackles on 335 career tackles attempts.
- Has the size to match up 1-on-1 with tight ends.

BOTTOM LINE:

Allen fits the box-safety mold, as he works well in the run game and does his best coverage work in underneath zones. He had a better showing from split-safety looks last season, and he could see some snaps there at the next level, but he's most at home closer to the line of scrimmage. Allen fits best as a true strong safety in a cover-3 heavy scheme, where he can limit his snaps at free safety and have an impact against the run and in the short passing game.

OVERVIEW:

- Ranked 19th among safeties with a run-stop percentage of 6.2 and led the draft class with 29 run-stops last season.
- Recorded 50 tackles when lined up within eight yards of the line of scrimmage, 2nd-most among safeties last season.
- Struggles to shed blocks, but sifts through the trash well to find the ball.
- Very experienced. Played 3,497 snaps during his four-year career at Virginia.
- Missed 43 tackles on and incredible 502 tackle attempts (one every 11.7 attempts) during his career.
- Has nine interceptions and eight pass breakups on 136 career targets.
- Breaks well on out routes from quarters alignment. That aggressiveness has been used against him on double-moves.
- Very few snaps as a pure center fielder.

BOTTOM LINE:

Blanding fits the mold of a two-high safety, as he's capable when playing quarters, but also has enough range on the back end of cover-2. He's at his best working downhill in the running game, where he knows how to find the ball and he's a sure tackler. We haven't seen a whole lot from him as a single-high safety, and he could stand to improve at the catch point, but a split-safety role or one that puts him in the box a portion of the time appears to be the best fit for Blanding.

2015	78	7	3	1	1	1	0	0.0%	0	0	2	0	0.0

OVERVIEW:

- Closes quickly on underneath routes.
- Led all safeties with six interceptions last season.
- Finished with seven pass breakups last season, tied for seventh in the nation among safeties.
- Dropped a number of interception opportunities last year but always seemed to be in the right place at the right time to pick off tipped passes.
- Not very physical when playing in the box or taking on blockers.
- Shows good speed when getting to the edge in the run game.
- Has good size/length to make up for subpar positioning.
- Solid range as deep safety.

BOTTOM LINE:

Elliott is one of the better free safety prospects in the draft, as he has speed and range on the back end. He has to clean up his reads, as he'll often be a step or two out of position, but his length aids in his ability to get back into the play. He's not a powerful run defender, so his best fit is likely on the back end, especially in two-high looks where he has good playmaking potential.

2015	310	9	1	2	3	29	13	44.8%	208	1	2	3	52.1

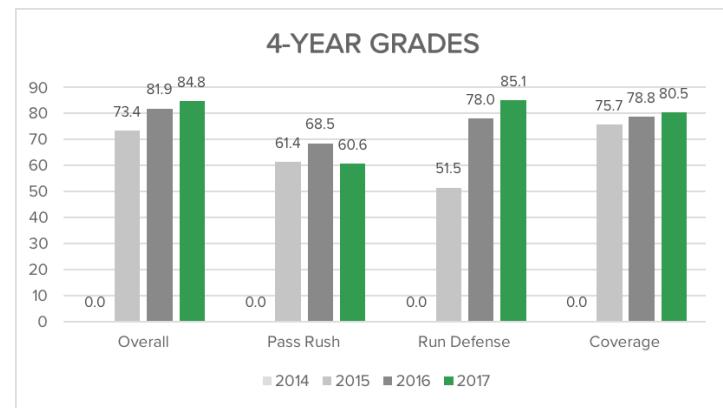

OVERVIEW:

- Struggles with shifty slots and horizontal routes in man coverage.
- Good size and physicality to cover tight ends and bigger receivers.
- Has some ugly plays in the open field at free safety.
- Will miss tackles in the open field. Has 22 missed tackles on 166 career attempts.
- Times blitzes extremely well.
- Excellent feel for zone coverage.
- Played all over the field at Alabama. Has potential as a dime linebacker at next level.
- Reads and breaks quickly on screens.
- Plays under control in the run game and finishes with power.
- Run-stop percentage of 6.7 when lined up in the box ranked 10th in the draft class.

BOTTOM LINE:

Harrison does his best work closer to the line of scrimmage, where he can cover bigger receivers and finish plays against the run. He has an excellent feel for the game, from understanding zone coverage to timing blitzes, though he has his limitations when playing deep safety. Harrison can fill multiple roles for a defense and a coordinator playing to his strengths should get a very productive player.

2015	115	5	0	1	4	15	5	33.3%	44	0	0	0	42.4

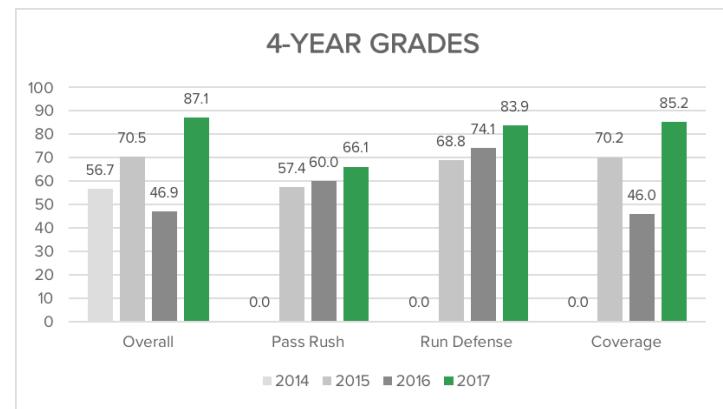

OVERVIEW:

- Can get turned around when isolated 1-on-1. Overcommits to the outside.
- Can get stuck in the mud vs. two-way go.
- Stays on top of routes well from free safety role. Tracks the ball well.
- Tied for 14th in the nation with six pass breakups last season.
- Left a few interceptions on the table last season.
- Excellent at reading the quarterback and reacting accordingly.
- Only one strong year of production at Wisconsin. Played 1,186 career snaps.
- Good movement skills. Takes good routes to the quarterback on blitzes, has some wiggle after the catch on interceptions.
- Missed only seven tackles on 76 career attempts.
- Not a heavy hitter in the run game, but plays balanced and under control.

BOTTOM LINE:

While Jamerson moves well, he struggles when isolated against more nuanced route runners. He made a number of fine plays from deep safety last season and he has potential in both split and single-high looks. Quarters teams may not want him isolated on receivers and tight ends all that often, but he does his best work with his eyes on the quarterback and breaking on the ball.

2015	693	53	8	6	22	34	16	47.1%	171	0	0	1	62.3

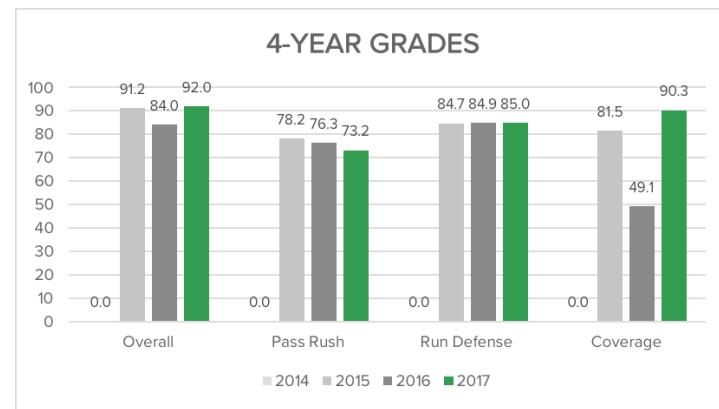

OVERVIEW:

- Top-graded overall safety in the nation as a true freshman in 2015 and again as a junior in 2017.
- Outstanding size and athleticism. Flies around the field and even has the quicks to hang with slot receivers, despite his size.
- Can fill multiple roles on defense. Can cover slot receivers or tight ends or play deep in a split-safety role. Also a classic dime linebacker.
- Can rush the passer in true 1-on-1 situations. Has seven sacks, six hits, and 25 hurries on only 111 career pass-rushes.
- Attacks downhill from quarters alignment. Finished second in the nation with 16 stops in the pass game.
- Tied for second in the nation with eight pass breakups last season.
- Athleticism allows him to gain depth in zone and size allows him to compress passing lanes.
- Can be a step slow to recognize routes in zone coverage.

BOTTOM LINE:

James is exactly what the NFL needs on the defensive side of the ball. His size and athleticism allow him to fill multiple positions along the defense, but he may be best in a Landon Collins-like split-safety role where he can work downhill, support the run, and make an impact in the short passing game. As offensive continues to trot out offensive chess pieces, players like James are the answer. A creative defensive coordinator will make the most of James' skills and he'll be a game-changer at the next level.

2015	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0.0%	0	0	0	0	0.0

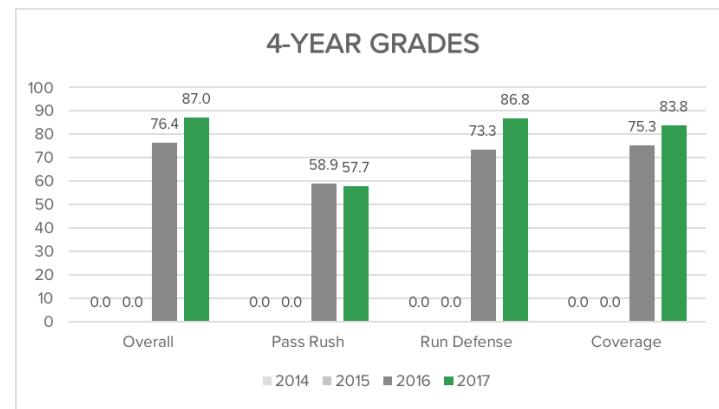

OVERVIEW:

- Flies to the ball on underneath routes.
- Will sometimes be a step slow to react to routes in his zone.
- Can get caught with his eyes in the backfield on play action.
- Missed 13 tackles on 116 attempts in his two years at Southern Miss.
- Moves well. Can hang with receivers when isolated 1-on-1.
- Reads the quarterback and breaks quickly on the ball. Finished with seven pass breakups last season, tied for 7th in the nation among safeties.
- Good length allows him to make plays in underneath zones.
- Keeps his leverage when playing contain in the run game.
- Can get moved at the point of attack against bigger tight ends.

BOTTOM LINE:

Moore had a breakout 2017 season that saw him making plays on the ball from a variety of alignments. He can hang with receivers when isolated and he has the movement skills to make plays on the back end of the defense. Against the run, he's not a hammer, but he plays under control and knows how to prevent big plays on the edge. Moore is one of the underrated safeties in this class and he has a potential fit in multiple schemes.

2015	929	42	5	9	19	47	26	55.3%	389	4	0	3	111.0

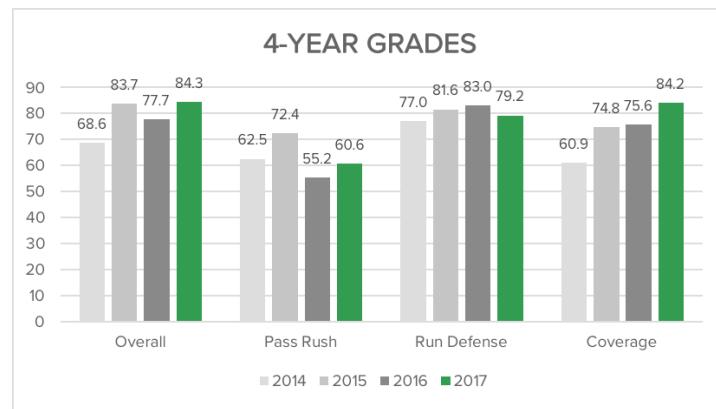

OVERVIEW:

- Experienced. Played 3,222 snaps at Oklahoma over his four years.
- Missed 36 tackles on 221 career attempts.
- Dives at a ball carrier's legs often, for better or for worse.
- Can play out of control and lose balance in the open field.
- Can get grabby when faced with a two-way go in quarters looks.
- Will lay a big hit from free safety role, but must be more physical at the catch point in contested situations.
- Tenacious tackler in the short pass game. Looking to make a big hit or take the ball away.
- Struggles when asked to cover better slot receivers.
- Solid feel for zone coverage. Works deep to short and closes quickly on underneath routes.

BOTTOM LINE:

Parker's game doesn't stand out in any one area, but he's a solid all-around player. He's a good zone player and could have success in both split-safety looks and as a curl/flat player. He's not great in man coverage, while his aggressive tackling nature can get him into trouble in the open field. Parker is at his best in a zone-heavy scheme, and he's worth a look in the middle rounds in the right system.

2015	102	8	1	1	4	13	7	53.9%	76	0	1	0	39.3

OVERVIEW:

- Good size and length. Box safety potential.
- Struggles against shiftier slot receivers.
- Has the size to cover tight ends. May be able to fill a specialist role at the next level.
- Has plenty of experience playing over the slot and has made big plays in the pass game (see one-handed Indiana interception in 2016).
- Struggles when playing in space as a deep safety.
- Played only 20 percent of his snaps at free safety last season.
- Missed 19 tackles on 164 attempts during his career.

BOTTOM LINE:

Queiro may be limited at the next level, but he can fulfill useful roles. His size and length make him a potential man-coverage option against tight ends and he works well in the run game as the extra man in the box. There are ugly plays on tape when he has to play in space or cover slot receivers, but if managed properly, Queiro can be a useful sub-package player.

OVERVIEW:

- Excellent range from deep safety. Multiple highlight-reel interceptions from single-high alignment.
- Changes direction extremely well. Lateral agility allows him to handle two-way go from quarters alignment.
- Could cover slot receivers. Allowed a passer rating of just 72.0 when covering the slot last season.
- Uses his agility to sidestep crack blocks in the run game.
- Not physical in the run game, but willing to mix it up.
- Missed 16 tackles on 143 career attempts.
- Run-stop percentage of 2.3 when lined up in the box ranked 86th in the draft class.

BOTTOM LINE:

Webb brings some versatility to the defense, but in a different way from other safeties. He may be the best pure single-high safety in the draft, as he moves efficiently and can make plays at the catch point, but his lateral agility also lends itself to covering slot receivers. He may never be great playing downhill or in the box, but as a free safety and chess piece against shifty slot receivers, Webb adds plenty of value.

LINEBACKER

POSITION OVERVIEW

There are a couple of star prospects at the linebacker spot, but after that the group gets relatively thin quite quickly.

Roquan Smith and Tremaine Edmunds are the two biggest names of the group, with Edmunds providing NFL teams with a mouth-watering prospect of talent and potential, and Smith providing them more of the finished article that has already been a star and big impact player.

After those two there are still several talented players that could make an early and every-down impact, with Boise State's Leighton Vander Esch the most obvious of the chasing pack. Lower down in the draft, there is an interesting mix of talented athletes that have underachieved on the field and productive college players who will struggle to hit the NFL benchmarks when it comes to measurables.

This draft also features an unusual number of players who are coming off a down year and whose best college season was 2016, not their most recent action.

You finished with 120 tackles this year? That's great, but where did you make them? If a defender is racking up tackles but not keeping the offense from getting what they were after, how meaningful are they? For our run-stop percentage Signature Stat, we've combined our tackle totals (built from viewing games retrospectively and with the aid of a rewind button, so consider their accuracy a step beyond the inconsistent numbers you'll find in the unofficial 'official' stats), our run defense snap counts, and defensive Stops to produce this worthy look at individual run defense production.

Stops are what we judge to be tackles that prevent an offensive success (defined as gaining 40 percent of required yardage on first down, 60 percent on second down, and the entire required yardage on third or fourth) and making more of them per run defense snap will bump you on this list.

Tackling Efficiency (LB)

Putting missed tackles into perspective, this Signature Stat not only boils all of the tackling data down to a simple 'attempts per miss' number, it also separates out the tackling efficiency of all linebackers and defensive backs on the snaps they've spent in run defense and pass defense.

Pass-Rushing productivity (LB)

The single most referenced Signature Stat for the defensive side of the ball is our 'pass-rushing productivity' that calculates a score to reflect the frequency of pressure generated by a defender. All sacks, hits, and hurries are added up and (with sacks weighted heavier and some multipliers in place to give us a workable PRP score) they're broken down on a per-pass-rushing-snap basis.

2015	725	4	3	9	2	62	10	6	37	16	28	162	3	2	0

OVERVIEW:

- Graded solidly in 2017, but was dramatically better the season before for the Buckeyes, earning an overall grade of 87.7 as a sophomore.
- Was at his best in 2017 during the Big-10 Championship game and the team's bowl game against USC.
- Allowed three touchdowns in coverage in each of his past two seasons of play, notched just two interceptions and two pass breakups over that span.
- Has speed to burn and can be extremely effective coming forward towards the line of scrimmage
- Has the skills to mirror receivers and stick with them in coverage, but needs to improve challenging at the catch point.
- Is significantly more lost in zone coverage, and will need to improve that at the next level to be a three-down player.

BOTTOM LINE:

Jerome Baker has the athletic profile of a top pick in this draft, and at least one season of play that suggested he can live up to that potential. Took a step back in 2017, which is always a concern, but has the skills to attack at speed against the run and cover backs and tight ends in man coverage. Will need to develop his game as a zone defender to avoid being a scheme-specific player in the NFL.

OVERVIEW:

- Huge linebacker at 6-foot-5 and 250-pounds, and is just 19 years old. He will be just 20 by opening day of the 2018 NFL season.
- Has 128 defensive stops over the past three seasons of college play, only two of which were every-down roles.
- Has also been a significant factor on the blitz, notching six sacks in each of the past two seasons and adding four hits and 13 hurries in 2017.
- Shows elite lateral movement and can shed blocks at ease when scraping to mirror the running back behind the line.
- Occasionally blows his run fits, attacking the wrong side of a block and allowing significant breakdown in defensive gap integrity.
- Immense physical talent, but even at his size can't overwhelm blockers at the second level without improving hand use.

BOTTOM LINE:

Physical monster at the linebacker position with an athletic profile unmatched by any other linebacker in this draft, and at just 19 has plenty of room to grow as well. His production has been outstanding at Virginia Tech and the flaws in his game are easily rectified with some more experience and coaching at the next level. Is a huge player for the position, and may not be done growing. Needs to show he can maintain speed and skills in coverage at that size in the NFL. Pro-Bowl level potential in any scheme.

OVERVIEW:

- Grade was solid in 2017, but was fantastic the season before at 91.2, where he graded well in all facets and was phenomenal against the run.
- Misses too many tackles, with 11 in each of the past two seasons including more than one that led directly to touchdowns in 2017.
- Reads the play well, but can look a little stiff and unathletic as he makes his way to the ball.
- Has a tendency to be shifted too easily upon contact, particularly laterally – gets moved out of the lane he is filling with minor impact.
- Was suspended for violating team rules in 2017, which along with his big decline in play will be a concern for his prospects.
- Surrenders to a block too easily, allowing himself to be absorbed into contact rather than shedding the block.

BOTTOM LINE:

A season ago Stacy Thomas posted one of the best single-season grades we have seen from anybody in this draft class. He is 6-foot-1 and 240 pounds, but his 2017 tape was a significant blow to his NFL chances. It wasn't bad, but it was significantly less impressive and highlighted far more of his shortcomings as a player. Could resuscitate his prospects if he can test well pre-draft, but otherwise has a lot working against him.

OVERVIEW:

- Had one of the best coverage grades in the nation in 2017, an 88.7 that ranked one spot above Roquan Smith.
- Has had back to back excellent seasons in coverage, but matched that coverage performance with his run defense in 2017.
- Shows a great feel for the game against the run and the pass, particularly in zone, but has clear athletic limitations.
- Didn't allow a touchdown in either of his last two seasons of play and had seven interceptions over that span.
- Allowed a passer rating of just 49.9 when targeted in 2017, one of the best marks in the draft class and the best mark of anybody with 20-plus targets.
- Allowed just 62 yards in coverage from 26 targets in 2017.
- Has excellent technique against the run or the pass, but can lose balance and control against superior athletes.

BOTTOM LINE:

Skai Moore missed the entire 2016 season with a herniated disc in his neck that required surgery. That is the kind of injury that will raise plenty of medical red flags, and to go along with that he is both undersized and under-athletic. He has, though, been incredibly productive over multiple seasons in the SEC and shows clearly excellent instincts and play. Moore has plenty of negatives to overcome, but his tape suggests he deserves a look in the NFL and could yet surprise those that would write him off.

OVERVIEW:

- Has graded well over the past two seasons of play for Alabama, but has now had back-to-back knee injuries that will hurt his draft stock.
- Grade and production took a major step backward in 2017 after his knee injury and he looked noticeably slower and less explosive.
- Has been limited to just 1,165 snaps on defense over his college career, which is less than some NFL linebackers played in 2017 alone.
- Smart linebacker who communicated consistently within the Alabama defense and was rarely out of place with his run fits.
- Is a little undersized, but previously offset that with speed and athleticism. Will need to get back to 100 percent to be as effective in the NFL.
- Is capable of both running around blockers at the second level or attacking them head on with good leverage and a violent hit.

BOTTOM LINE:

A reliable and versatile linebacker, Shaun Dion Hamilton is always in the right place on the field, but injuries have begun to threaten his NFL prospects and durability will be the biggest red flag he has to negotiate pre-draft. He has seen his season ended two years in a row by knee injuries, and was markedly less explosive an athlete in 2017 after the first of them. He may not be able to work out for teams before the draft due to a knee fracture, but could become a late-round steal if he can get back to 100 percent health.

2015	75	0	0	0	0	13	4	0	7	4	5	18	0	0	0

OVERVIEW:

- Elite coverage skills. Did not have an interception in 2017 but had one of the best coverage grades in the nation at 88.5.
- Has incredible speed and burst, and notched 74 defensive stops over the season, the second-most in the nation among all linebackers.
- On just 54 blitzes this season had eight sacks and 22 total pressures, showing top-level burst to finish pass-rushes.
- Pass-rushing productivity score of 29.6 was the No. 1 mark among inside linebackers against SEC competition this year.
- Ranked 6th among 145 eligible linebackers in run-stop percentage (13.0 percent).
- Has improved his overall grade in each of the past two seasons and been in an exceptionally good range for two years.
- Was at his best in big games, with impressive grades in the SEC Championship game as well as the college football playoffs.

BOTTOM LINE:

Roquan Smith is one of the draft's best linebackers. A player that excels in all areas, he has the elite athleticism and coverage skills to be the perfect NFL linebacker. He has displayed special coverage skills at the college level, even if that hasn't translated to interception numbers, and coverage linebackers in the NFL have never been more important. His athleticism, along with those coverage skills, could make him a special next-level defender, and any weaknesses in his game are all in the less-important area of run defense.

OVERVIEW:

- Graded well in 2017, but all too much of that grade came as a pass-rusher on the blitz where he often added to the rush rather than covered.
- Has outstanding speed, athleticism, agility and size. Will likely be among the best testers pre-draft when it comes to measurables.
- Is able to live with matchup weapons on offense as well as chase down athletic quarterbacks trying to escape the rush.
- Didn't have an interception in 2017, but had two pass breakups and allowed only one touchdown.
- Has been excellent against the run for two straight seasons, but has yet to stand out in coverage consistently – the area of most NFL importance.
- Has exceptional athletic talent and is still low on experience, with just 1,126 total snaps on defense in his college career, 644 of which came this year.

BOTTOM LINE:

There are few – if any – linebackers in this draft class that will be able to match Rashaan Evans' athletic and measurable profile before the draft, and he has as high a ceiling as any linebacker in the draft. He is an unfinished prospect though, and needs to develop his coverage skills – the success of which will ultimately determine his NFL value. His play against the run and ability to impact the pass game on the blitz should mean he has an early impact regardless, and then development will determine his ceiling.

OVERVIEW:

- Has the build and athleticism of an NFL linebacker and ticks all of the boxes from a measurables standpoint.
- Substantially better when he is coming forward than when he is forced to drop away from the line of scrimmage and play moving backwards.
- Took a big leap forward in production in 2017, both in terms of raw numbers and overall grade. Almost doubled tackles and defensive stops.
- Was only thrown at 24 times in coverage and just 55 times over his three-year college career. Didn't allow a touchdown across three seasons.
- Missed at least ten tackles in every season of his college career, including a career-high 15 in 2017, albeit on significantly more attempts.
- Was previously one of the top high school recruits in the country and the best linebacker recruit.
- Had five sacks and 26 total pressures from 135 pass-rushing snaps in 2017. He has had five sacks in back to back seasons.

BOTTOM LINE:

One of the top high school recruits in the country, Malik Jefferson never quite realised that potential at Texas and only in 2017 did we begin to see why he was so sought after. He looks the part of an NFL linebacker from a size and speed standpoint, and when attacking the line of scrimmage can be a star. Things get a little more uncomfortable when he has to play in space and drop away from the line in coverage. If he is limited to a two-down role despite that athleticism he will be worth nothing more than a mid-round pick.

OVERVIEW:

- Took a big leap forward in 2017 in terms of performance, going from good player to excellent, grading among the best in the country.
- Graded well in all facets of the game, but his biggest strength was run defense.
- Led all FBS inside linebackers in both run-stops (57) and run-stop percentage (15.9 percent).
- Flows to the football on the ground, making 46 tackles in the run game for a gain of two or fewer yards, the most in the nation at any position.
- Can get out of position in the run game trying to run around blocks rather than take them on.
- Shows solid coverage awareness but without the elite athleticism to squeeze windows and tighten throwing lanes yet.

BOTTOM LINE:

In his first year starting, Leighton Vander Esch catapulted himself into the elite linebacker conversation after looking solid in spot duty the two years before that. He's an instinctive linebacker who is able to work quickly to the running back in the run game and bottle up those plays. His coverage is solid, and he shows good positioning, but may not have the elite level athleticism to make special plays in that area. Should still have room to develop given relative experience. Will likely be a solid NFL player quickly.

OVERVIEW:

- A solid linebacker with three-straight seasons of impressive PFF grades, graded well in all facets of the game in 2017.
- Did not allow a touchdown across 55 targets this season, the largest number of targets among all linebackers in the class.
- Had two interceptions and seven pass breakups, the latter mark led the draft class by 3.
- 61 defensive stops over the season, 6th among all linebackers in the draft class.
- Shows some good straight-line speed, but looks a little more suspect in short area quickness and change of direction.
- Is inconsistent with block shedding, and doesn't have the size or power to stack and shed at the next level. Needs to improve how he attacks blocks.

BOTTOM LINE:

An all-around linebacker who has graded well in all areas at Iowa, Josey Jewell has some interesting numbers and tape that will make NFL teams take a long look despite some measurables concerns. He was a solid coverage player and made a lot of plays on the ball to go along with a relentless collection of defensive stops. Can run with speed in a straight line, but will need to prove he can move with NFL-level quickness and deal with second-level blocks. Has three-down talent and the kind of instincts that may mitigate measurable concerns.

OVERVIEW:

- Hard nosed downhill thumper at linebacker who was PFF's top-graded linebacker in the draft class in 2017 thanks to his run defense.
- Had 53 defensive stops this season, with 79 solo tackles and 35 assists.
- Played at the Senior Bowl and struggled in coverage during 1-on-1 drills. Saw just one rep in pass-rush drills but won that rep.
- Had a relatively anonymous outing in the game itself, posting an average grade and just one tackle from 30 snaps for the North team.
- Struggles to change direction in space and may be athletically short of the NFL standard to convert his college production to the next level.
- Shows the ability to play strong in tight spaces, shucking off blocks and forcing cuts from running backs behind the line.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ja'Whaun Bentley had an exceptional PFF grade this season, which came almost entirely in the run game where he was a consistent hammer. He is noticeably stiff in his movements and will struggle to play in space against more fluid athletes, but when he has the opportunity to operate in tight quarters he can deliver hits and work through contact to find the ball carrier and impact the run game. Struggled at the Senior Bowl in coverage and was anonymous in the game, suggesting that a step up in competition and athlete may cause problems.

2015	166	0	0	1	1	14	1	2	11	2	5	-9	0	0	0

OVERVIEW:

- Three straight seasons of solid grading in limited snaps before taking a huge leap forward in 2017 with a full-time role for Clemson
- Graded well in all facets of the game and had impressive grades at the most crucial times, including the college football playoffs.
- Allowed two touchdown catches on 47 targets, but also had two interceptions and a pass breakup, allowed an average of just 7.8 yards per reception.
- Both of his interceptions in 2017 were returned for touchdowns.
- Missed only five tackles all year, including three in one game against Virginia Tech.
- Had 198 snaps on special teams, including play in all phases of special teams. Made 39 career tackles on special teams, including six this final year.
- Just an average athlete for his size, despite coverage ability.

BOTTOM LINE:

Coverage linebackers have never been more important in the NFL and that's Dorian O'Daniel's speciality, even if he has also graded well in other aspects of the game. He is undersized without the typical boost in speed and athleticism that usually brings, which makes his projection to the next level tough, but he has been a monster on special teams for Clemson, which will give any NFL team comfort while they work out what he can do for them to contribute on defense. NFL future may be as a matchup coverage player.

2015	690	0	5	3	0	57	9	7	31	23	46	190	1	1	3

OVERVIEW:

- Another player that was markedly better in 2016 than he was this last season, Worley took a major step back in coverage.
- Allowed a passer rating of 111.7 in 2017 having allowed one more than 50 points lower the season before (59.1).
- Was beaten for more than two yards per reception more in 2017 than the season before and allowed 78.1 percent of targets to be caught.
- Sure tackler with just four misses in 2017 from 70 attempts and only 16 misses in the last four years of play.
- Can read the play and flow to the run well, but struggles to deal with blockers or when in space in coverage.
- Likely a two-down player at the next level.
- Has special teams experience, with 55 snaps across multiple units in 2017 and 117 snaps

BOTTOM LINE:

In terms of on field production, Chris Worley's NFL ceiling is pretty low, and likely capped to being a two-down linebacker and core special teamer at best. Special teams is an area that he does have extensive experience in, however, with 172 special teams snaps over the past two seasons and four special teams tackles. He struggles to contend with blockers in the run game and has been exposed in coverage, so he will have to hope to impress with his intangibles and special teams work.

2015	136	0	0	0	0	17	6	1	10	2	3	14	1	0	0

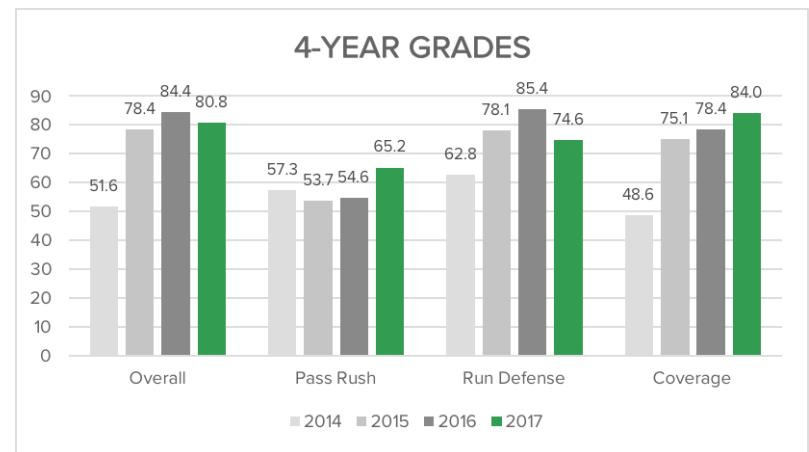

OVERVIEW:

- Three seasons of solid play entering the NFL, but his 2017 season went off the rails at midseason and he struggled in his final two games.
- Appeared at the NFLPA All-Star game, notched 23 snaps on defense but recorded little but a missed tackle for his troubles.
- Didn't allow a touchdown in coverage over the past two seasons, but was only targeted 33 times in primary coverage over that time.
- Notched two interceptions and three pass breakups in 2017 from just 18 targets, allowed a passer rating of 30.3.
- Ranked 4th in the draft class among linebackers with 65 defensive stops over the season, and flows quickly to the football.
- Shows impressive instincts against the run or pass, and has the size to play at the next level, but will need to tighten up mistakes.
- Missed a monstrous 28 tackles in 2017, the most in the nation and three times as many as he missed in 2016.

BOTTOM LINE:

Al-Rasheed Benton was a talisman for the West Virginia defense even if his college career ended on a disappointing note with back to back ugly games and a bowl defeat for the Mountaineers. Shows excellent instincts and the size to play at the next level, but was a missed tackle machine in 2017, accounting for much of his drop off in grade from the previous season. If he can tighten that up he could make a quick impact in the NFL.

INTERIOR DEFENDER

POSITION OVERVIEW

What this class lacks in versatility and depth, it makes up for in top-level talent. It has an elite one-tech nose tackle in Washington's Vita Vea and an elite three-tech in Michigan's Maurice Hurst. After that, there's a fairly drastic drop off. There's not a ton of great athletes in this class that get you excited about their pass-rushing potential. The few that do – Florida's Taven Bryan, Miami's RJ McIntosh, etc. – will likely get pushed up drafts boards as a result. Teams in need of interior help should be looking to go get one of the top two in the class.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Run-Stop Percentage (DI)

You finished with 120 tackles this year? That's great, but where did you make them? If a defender is racking up tackles but not keeping the offense from getting what they were after, how meaningful are they? For our run-stop percentage Signature Stat, we've combined our tackle totals (built from viewing games retrospectively and with the aid of a rewind button, so consider their accuracy a step beyond the inconsistent numbers you'll find in the unofficial 'official' stats), our run defense snap counts, and defensive Stops to produce this worthy look at individual run defense production.

Stops are what we judge to be tackles that prevent an offensive success (defined as gaining 40 percent of required yardage on first down, 60 percent on second down, and the entire required yardage on third or fourth) and making more of them per run defense snap will bump you on this list.

Pass-Rushing Productivity (DI)

The single most referenced Signature Stat for the defensive side of the ball is our 'pass-rushing productivity' that calculates a score to reflect the frequency of pressure generated by a defender. All sacks, hits, and hurries are added up and (with sacks weighted heavier and some multipliers in place to give us a workable PRP score) they're broken down on a per-pass-rushing-snap basis.

2015	738	386	352	5	3	5	0	39	10	0	36

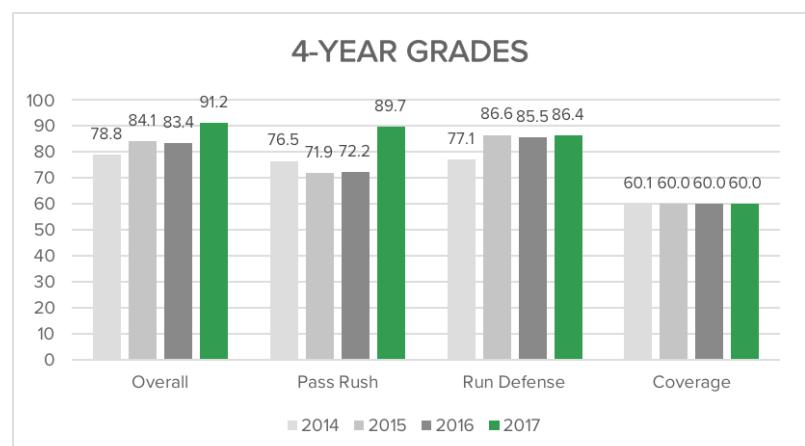

OVERVIEW:

- Listed at 6-0, 306, but could even be shorter than that. Noticeably much lower to the ground in his stance than everyone else.
- Some of the most active hands in the entire class. He's not going to quit until he's shed the block.
- Poor athlete. No closing speed whatsoever and first step leaves a lot to be desired.
- Uncanny balance. Will fight through multiple bodies and somehow be upright and ready to make a play still.
- Holds up to double teams extremely well. Great natural leverage. Has been one of highest-graded run defenders for multiple years.
- Experience playing three technique as well as nose tackle in Kansas State's defense.
- Ugly reps when he does lose. When Offensive linemen get in his pads he can get moved easily.

BOTTOM LINE:

Few defensive linemen in the entire country can match Geary's production over the course of his college career. His 91.2 overall grade was third-best in the FBS last year as he made huge strides as a pass-rusher. It rarely looks pretty, but Geary gets the job done. His lack of height and athleticism leaves him without a true position in the NFL, but I wouldn't want to bet against him.

2015	188	72	116	2	1	6	0	13	0	3	11

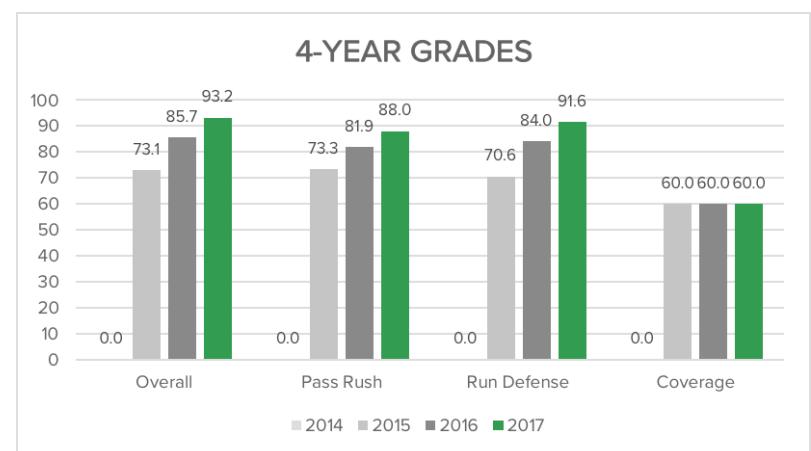

OVERVIEW:

- Rare coordination for a 340-pound man. Dancing bear-esque qualities. Even mixes in a spin move from time-to-time.
- An absolute unit. Dominated from first snap to the last against the run. Plays with immense power and solid leverage for his size.
- Tackle radius is iffy at best. More disruptor than finisher. Only 25 run-stops on the year.
- Was already on a very limited snap count at Washington. Played only 62 percent of their defensive snaps this past season (554 total).
- Already a well-developed pass-rushing repertoire. Hump was his go-to move, but also push-pulled well.
- Worrisome that he still ran hot and cold even on limited snap counts. Some low energy reps on film. Three games with only 1 pressure in 2017.

BOTTOM LINE:

The evaluation of Vea is as much about value as it is about talent. There's no denying that he could step in and be a force at nose tackle from day one, but how much will he offer as a pass-rusher and how many snaps can he play? He's only played over 50 percent of his team's snaps in one season in college. It's going to be tough to get first-round value if he can only be a two-down player in the NFL.

2015	253	105	148	1	1	3	0	20	4	6	18

OVERVIEW:

- Violent hands and first strike. Has the ability to ragdoll and toss aside opposing offensive linemen like it's nothing.
- Balance is an issue. Gets top heavy and has trouble staying on his feet when changing directions.
- Double teams were a problem. Had reps where he got taken out of the play completely.
- Injuries plagued him throughout his college career. Only played 1,079 snaps his entire college career.
- Checks boxes from a size and athleticism perspective. Ideal 3-4 defensive end toolbox to take on guards and tackles.
- Rangy versus the run. Can win quickly and close on the opposite side of the line of scrimmage.
- Not a power player. Wants to win with quicks and isn't quick enough to win consistently that way as pass-rusher.

BOTTOM LINE:

Thompson is a bull in a china shop at this point in his development. His game is unrefined and even awkward looking at times, but it still got the job done. His injuries are a concern, as is his mediocre pass-rushing prowess (only 13 total pressures this year). Thompson is an intriguing player after the top of the crop is gone on the interior.

2015	260	145	115	1	2	12	0	7	4	2	5

OVERVIEW:

- First step is fantastic. Got plenty of college guards completely off balance with how quickly he got on top of them.
- Flexibility of a man much smaller than his listed 290-plus pounds. Can dip and rip on guards.
- Tweener who may ultimately be best suited playing outside the tackles rather than inside.
- Power in his strike is nothing special. Not the kind of defensive tackle who can stand offensive linemen up on contact.
- Block awareness was poor in the run game. Would get washed completely out of plays from not seeing where block was coming from.
- Weapon on stunts with his ability to crash the B-gap.

BOTTOM LINE:

Bryan has the kind of first step that GMs will fall in love with – especially in a light defensive line class. It's concerning though that Florida let Bryan explode off the line of scrimmage consistently and he still wasn't anything special production-wise. He's a project in a number of ways, but his flashes suggest he could someday put it all together.

2015	47	29	18	1	0	0	0	2	1	0	2

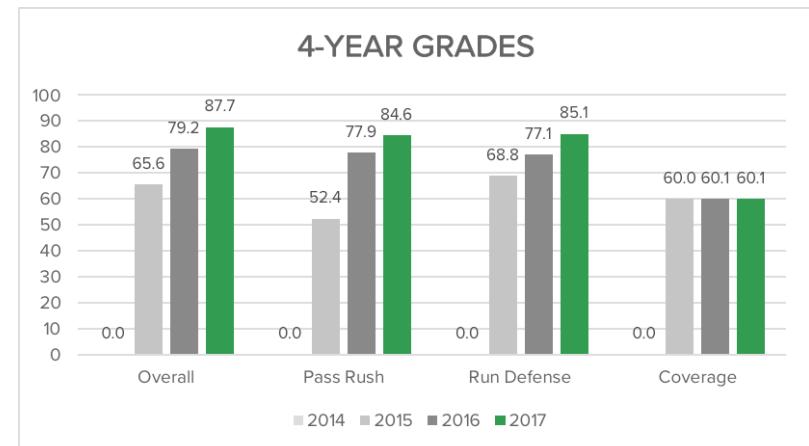

OVERVIEW:

- Havoc creator. McIntosh wants to disrupt every single play by fighting his way into the backfield in some way, shape, or form.
- Legit range in the run game. Can work his way from the backside to the front side and still finish on the ball carrier.
- Slightly built to translate to the NFL game. Looks more like a defensive end at this point than a 3-tech.
- Plays higher than you'd like against both run and pass.
- Form against double teams is non-existent much of the time. Plays neither blocker and can get owned.
- Led to him getting his butt kicked to his lowest grade all year in the bowl game against Wisconsin.
- High motor type player who's will to make plays is inspiring. Not always the most technically sound pass-rusher, but fights snap after snap.

BOTTOM LINE:

McIntosh is an athletic 3-technique, defensive end tweener that profiles to attacking 1-gap defenses. He's not so overtly athletic though to where you'd fall in love with him at the top of the draft. Still, McIntosh is one of the few interior players in this class who offers legitimate pass-rushing tools that will translate to the NFL.

2015	382	207	173	3	7	20	0	20	9	0	21

OVERVIEW:

- Incredibly explosive off the ball. When he fires off as pass-rusher there's a noticeable difference between him and others in this class.
- Almost always wins leverage battle. Plays very low even for an undersized DT. Led all DT/NTs with 49 total pressures.
- Superb motor. Always fighting even when initially stoned as pass-rusher. Will chase from backside of runs and screens.
- Small strike zone for opposing offensive linemen. Can rarely get him locked up cleanly
- Holding up to double teams difficult at his size. Played 237 snaps at NT in 2017, but almost has to be 3-tech only in NFL.
- Awareness can be an issue. Will attack blocks head down and lose ball carriers
- Balance is iffy at times. Has some ugly reps when he gets off balance and can get swallowed by Offensive linemen.

BOTTOM LINE:

Hurst is the cream of this defensive tackle crop. There isn't another interior player that can come close to his production as a pass-rusher in college and everything on tape suggests it will translate to the NFL. His size will give teams pause, but at no point in his college career was it ever a serious issue against the run – he still ranked 14th nationally in run-stop percentage. Hurst is a consistently dominant force whose only real question marks have little to do with his on-field performance.

2015	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0

OVERVIEW:

- Bully at Louisiana this past season. Manhandled the offensive linemen of the Sun Belt.
- Was nearly unblockable in the run game at times. Had the 4th most run-stops (32) among interior players.
- Very little lateral agility. Will limit him as a pass-rusher at the next level. Purely a power player.
- Terribly unrefined as a pass-rusher. No real moves to speak of outside of barreling into offensive linemen.
- Size likely limits him to a three-technique at the next level.
- Still let offensive linemen into his pads too often. Often won after fighting to get himself clean instead of staying clean in the first place.

BOTTOM LINE:

Perry is one of the most intriguing small school defensive tackles in the draft class. He came out of nowhere to be an absolute force against the run in 2017. Unfortunately, his pass-rush still left a lot to be desired, as he won mainly through a strength advantage that won't be present in the NFL. That's not to say he can't develop, but he's some ways away from contributing in that regard.

2015	388	228	152	8	9	21	0	18	6	4	20

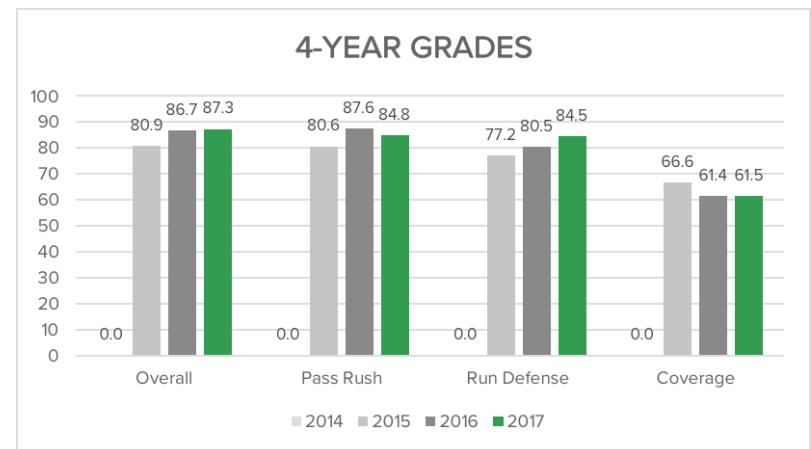

OVERVIEW:

- Played out of position all season long on the interior of Washington State's defense. Only took seven snaps outside the tackles all season.
- Fantastic athlete who often times had to do little more than slant across an offensive lineman's face at the snap to win.
- Comfortable fighting through traffic with terrific bend. Go to move as a rip on the interior and was usually all he needed.
- Doesn't have a refined pass-rushing skill set. Really only used his hands when he had already beaten a Offensive lineman to get himself clean.
- Great balance as a pass-rusher or run defender. Had to face the double teams that came on inside and held up well.
- Didn't play in space often, but when he did his closing ability was special.

BOTTOM LINE:

It's impossible to know what Mata'afo will look like facing offensive tackles snap after snap because he's never done it. If you're going to take a chance on a guy who played out of position though, I'd do it with a player like Mata'afo, who still graded extremely well while playing defensive tackle. All the traits are there, but he'll need good coaching and patience at the next level.

2015	551	305	245	7	7	14	2	30	7	2	29

OVERVIEW:

- Primarily a nose tackle at Stanford (455 snaps last season), but unlikely to hold up there in the NFL.
- Very disciplined against the run. Often played head up nose tackle and did well to keep his two-way go versus the center.
- Much more developed as a run defender than pass-rusher at this point. Didn't have an above average pass-rushing grade until this season.
- That being said, was asked to be a run first player much of the time in Stanford's scheme.
- Fantastic awareness in the run game. Eyes always tracking running back. Led all defensive tackles this past season with 46 run-stops.
- Nothing special athletically. Wins almost exclusively with strength and technique.
- Showed the ability to take over games against Oregon State and USC, with two of the highest-graded games this season.

BOTTOM LINE:

Phillips doesn't have the sort of raw, physical traits that turns heads, but he does have an impressive track record of performance that's seen him improve every single year of his career. In a defensive line class lacking high-end talent, Phillips could move up boards because of how capable he is of contributing right away as a run defender.

2015	443	204	239	4	3	10	0	25	8	3	22

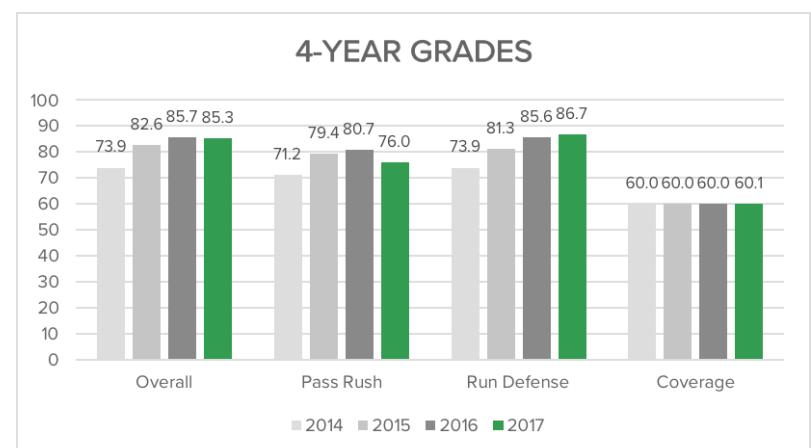

OVERVIEW:

- Stout frame that's difficult to out-leverage and generate movement on 1-on-1 and Nnadi knows how to play low.
- At the same time, Nnadi struggled to consistently move the line of scrimmage the other way in the run game.
- Impressive mobility for a nose tackle. Centers had a hard time reaching him from a shade.
- Limited pass-rushing skill-set. Registered all of 19 pressures this season and was shut out in seven different games.
- Struggled cleanly separating from offensive linemen in the run game. Lack of length could be an issue.
- Consistently productive. Only one truly poorly graded game in the past three seasons.

BOTTOM LINE:

Nnadi might look like a pass-rushing 3-technique, but his best position at the next level is likely nose tackle. He simply doesn't offer enough as a pass-rusher to warrant early consideration, but it's hard to overlook three straight seasons grading above 82.0 for us. He never quite took the next step after a strong sophomore campaign though, and even took a step backwards as a pass-rusher this year.

2015	222	117	105	1	0	7	1	10	2	0	9

OVERVIEW:

- As with most defensive linemen from Alabama, very technically sound as a run defender and pass-rusher already.
- High swipe is his go-to pass-rushing move. Likes to hands fight with opposing offensive linemen.
- Tackle radius is fantastic – especially if teams see him as a nose tackle. Can make plays up and down the line of scrimmage.
- Heavy hands. When he wins, it's usually on first contact where he can control the interaction from the jump.
- Rarely wow'd as a pass-rusher. Not a ton of clean, quick, dominant wins.
- Motor is nothing special. Struggled to chase down quarterbacks when moved off their spot.
- Blew up the national championship game, where he was the highest-graded player.

BOTTOM LINE:

Payne is an NFL ready defensive tackle whose versatility will push him up draft boards. He is comfortable performing in any alignment imaginable between the tackles without his performance declining. At the same time though, he never truly dominated until the Georgia game. He's not near the pass-rusher that Jonathan Allen was a season ago, but his game should still translate quickly to the league.

2015	605	328	276	5	4	17	2	36	9	5	33

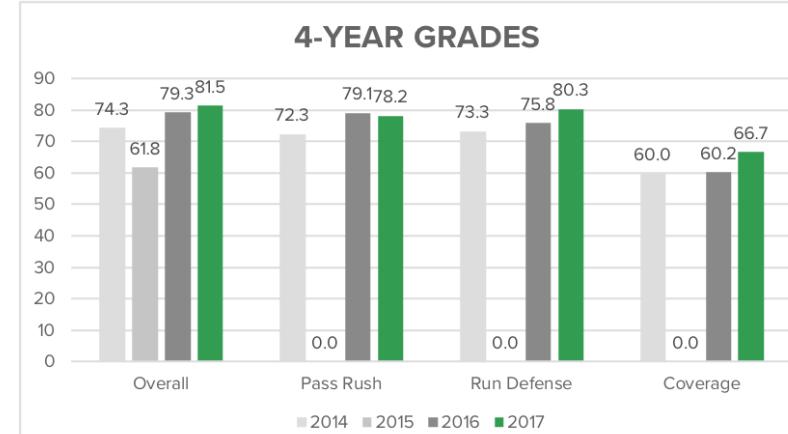

OVERVIEW:

- Penetrating defensive end. At his best when he's allowed to fire off into the backfield.
- Extremely inconsistent. Would disappear for games at a time. Four games this year without a single pressure.
- Highest grade, far and away the best performer in Senior Bowl 1-on-1s. Won 73 percent of his reps there.
- Not much of an anchor against double teams. Lower body strength leaves something to be desired.
- Versatility to play any alignment between the tackles. Took 84 snaps as a nose tackle last season.
- Hit and miss with his leverage. Doesn't fire off particularly low at the snap and can get forklifted by offensive linemen.
- Creative pass-rusher who times his move well. Killed a ton of guards this year with a spin move.

BOTTOM LINE:

Hill will be limited by his athleticism at the next level, but can still be a push-the-pocket type of nose tackle. The problem is, he won't be a run-stuffing nose tackle anytime soon and some teams aren't ready to make that trade off. His performance at the Senior Bowl practices was hard to ignore and will attract teams looking for some pass-rush from the nose tackle position.

2015	155	94	61	1	2	9	2	6	0	0	7

OVERVIEW:

- Slightly built defensive tackle with little college production to speak of. Would disappear for whole games at a time. 7 sacks in college career.
- Plays with terrific leverage. Able to consistently move the line of scrimmage when going 1-on-1.
- Asked to play run first from a frog stance most snaps. Scheme not well suited to his strengths.
- Getting off of blocks is a major issue. Seemingly attached to offensive linemen far too often.
- Almost awkward looking in his movements. Nothing looks terribly natural about his play style.
- Pass-rushing toolbox is incredibly limited at this point. Only 35 pressures all last season. Never truly dominated.

BOTTOM LINE:

Brown flashed a number of reps that make him an intriguing evaluation, but they were so few and far between that you're left wanting more. He's graded out right around average all four seasons in college and isn't so athletic that makes one think there's underlying potential he hasn't reached.

EDGE DEFENDER

POSITION OVERVIEW

This year's edge class is riddled with players that have large question marks attached to them. It's a big reason why a clean prospect like North Carolina State's Bradley Chubb has pushed his way to the top of many draft boards. Many of the top prospects coming into the season either suffered injuries or took steps backwards.

Still, there are a handful of guys we ended up with first round grades on. The aforementioned Chubb looks like every down player from day one while Harold Landry and Arden Key's pre-2017 production and athleticism are hard to ignore. After that top group you have some athletic projects to choose from like UTSA's Marcus Davenport, USC's Uchenna Nwosu, Washington State's Hercules Mata'afa and Rutgers' Kemoko Turay, as well as some technically sound pass-rushers with physical limitations like Wake Forest's Duke Ejiofor, Ohio State's Sam Hubbard, and Oklahoma's Ogonnia Okoronkwo.

SIGNATURE STAT OVERVIEW

Run-Stop Percentage (EDGE)

You finished with 120 tackles this year? That's great, but where did you make them? If a defender is racking up tackles but not keeping the offense from getting what they were after, how meaningful are they? For our run-stop percentage Signature Stat, we've combined our tackle totals (built from viewing games retrospectively and with the aid of a rewind button, so consider their accuracy a step beyond the inconsistent numbers you'll find in the unofficial 'official' stats), our run defense snap counts, and defensive Stops to produce this worthy look at individual run defense production.

Stops are what we judge to be tackles that prevent an offensive success (defined as gaining 40 percent of required yardage on first down, 60 percent on second down, and the entire required yardage on third or fourth) and making more of them per run defense snap will bump you on this list.

Pass-Rushing Productivity (EDGE)

The single most referenced Signature Stat for the defensive side of the ball is our 'pass-rushing productivity' that calculates a score to reflect the frequency of pressure generated by a defender. All sacks, hits, and hurries are added up and (with sacks weighted heavier and some multipliers in place to give us a workable PRP score) they're broken down on a per-pass-rushing-snap basis.

2015	321	175	132	7	6	9	1	12	7	1	16

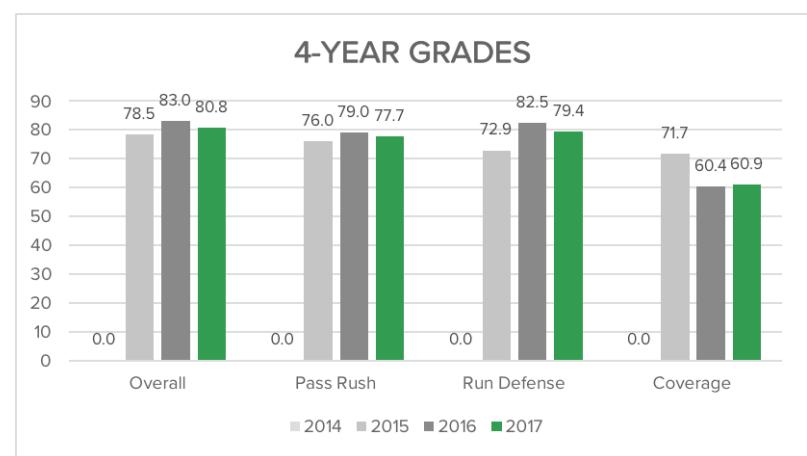

OVERVIEW:

- Ideal build for the position at 6-6, 265 pounds. Ability to play a number of different alignments at that size.
- Nothing special athletically. Noticeably a step slower out of stance than line mates at Ohio State.
- Never done as a pass-rusher. Won't get himself in bad positions and is just as likely to win with his second/third move as his first.
- Two-hand swipe is his go to move and will consistently fight tackles up high.
- Played only 528 snaps in 14 games and still had some slow reps. Never dominated a game from start to finish.
- Not overly powerful. Has to win with technique rather than physically imposing his will on offensive tackles.
- Even when he wins, can struggle to close on quarterback and was often times taken off balance by slight nudges

BOTTOM LINE:

Hubbard's evaluation is an exercise in what one values most from edge rushers, because his strengths and weaknesses are so defined. He's NFL ready from a technical standpoint, but nearly every elite edge rusher in the league is a far better athlete. He may not excite, but he could step on an NFL field today and be productive.

2015	86	36	32	2	1	2	0	3	2	0	4

OVERVIEW:

- Undersized at 6-1, but with exceptional length (34" arms) that can still get it done on the edge at the NFL level.
- Showed well at the Senior Bowl, with 50 percent win rate in 1-on-1s (second best of any edge) and was highest-graded defender in game.
- Fantastic natural leverage with his size allows him to play bigger than his weight (242) suggests. Not limited to pass-rusher only.
- Deadly inside spin move when employed. Has the balance for it to be a consistent weapon that offensive linemen have to worry about.
- Not the most physical of pass-rushers. Will get sack happy and just try to run around linemen instead of playing through them.
- Great lateral agility. Can often beat tackles with his quickness alone and can stop on a dime for an inside counter.
- Not a 'bend the edge' type of pass-rusher despite his size. Can be a little stiff when ripping to the edge.

BOTTOM LINE:

There are too many strikes against Okoronkwo (size/flexibility) to feel comfortable pounding the table for him at the top of the draft, but he offers a legit pass-rushing skillset that can contribute right away. He was the second-highest graded Power-5 edge defender this past season (87.5) and was a complete player at Oklahoma. He'll need to add strength to play full-time at the next level, but he's not too far off.

2015	586	330	256	5	4	22	4	34	12	3	23

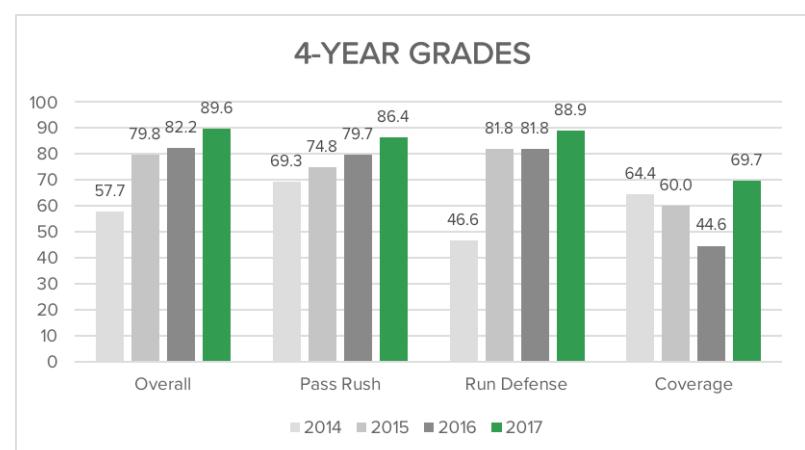

OVERVIEW:

- Physically imposing edge defender. The kind of height (6-foot-7) and length (34" arms) that teams crave setting the edge.
- Raw as can be. Needs to be taught pass-rushing technique from the ground up.
- Bull rush is go to move and even that could use some refining. Overpowered tackles in Conference USA.
- Lack of pass-rush repertoire apparent at Senior Bowl, where he won only 38 percent of reps in 1-on-1s.
- Pop on first contact in run game and as pass-rusher is special. Not many edge defenders even in NFL have his tools.
- Lined up almost exclusively against right tackles. Only took 127 snaps from right side all last season.

BOTTOM LINE:

Davenport is currently a collection of parts that have yet to be assembled into a working vehicle. The good news is that he could very well be a Ferrari if they're ever put together, but there's no way of knowing when and if that will happen. His upward grade progression in college is encouraging, as was his playmaking ability with 36 total stops this past season, but he's still pure projection at this point.

2015	289	107	125	1	1	11	0	18	4	5	15

OVERVIEW:

- Flashed dominant potential at times. Took over the Notre Dame game early in season with eight pressures.
- Dropped into coverage frequently in Georgia's scheme. Only rushed the passer on 192 snaps this past season.
- Elite length. Doesn't always use it well, but when he does he can keep himself clean.
- Average athlete. Get off doesn't do him any favors and had trouble finishing on ball carriers.
- Doesn't especially like playing through contact. Finesse type player.
- Slightly built and play strength is lacking. Has the type of frame that can put on more weight and he needs to.

BOTTOM LINE:

Carter looked like a first-rounder at times this past season, but a UDFA at others. His lack of consistency will certainly push him down draft boards, but it's easy to fall in love with some of his plays. Ultimately though, Carter's athleticism and overall production leave a lot to be desired. If he can put some added muscle on his frame, he can be a solid edge setter at the next level.

2015	221	163	56	2	8	20	0	6	1	1	7

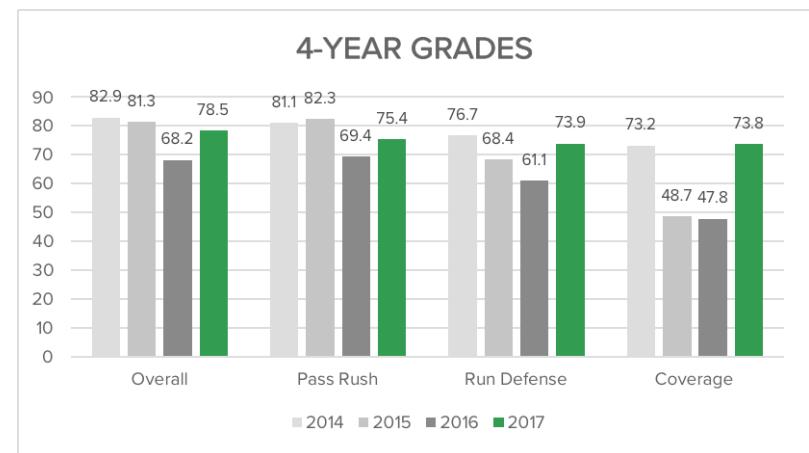

OVERVIEW:

- Bendy big man at 6-foot-5, 252 pounds who has the sort of flexibility that can't be taught.
- Athleticism combined with length is a deadly combo as a pass-rusher. Can execute myriad of pass-rushing moves.
- Won 55 percent of his 1-on-1s at the senior bowl, the 2nd-best rate of any edge there.
- Limited experience playing the run. Doesn't have the strength you'd want for a typical edge setter.
- Had some horrible reps in run defense when offensive tackles got into his pads. Could be designated pass-rusher at next level.
- Agility to cross face of tackles with ease.
- Closes to ball carriers and quarterbacks with explosiveness when he gets clean.

BOTTOM LINE:

Turay is a very interesting evaluation. He was dominant as a designated pass-rusher back in 2014 and 2015 (559 snaps combined). Back then he looked more like a wide receiver though. After putting on weight and getting a more full-time role in 2017, his dominance subsided greatly. With so little information to go on, his performance at the combine will be enormous for his draft stock.

2015	576	336	237	2	2	27	2	27	10	2	21

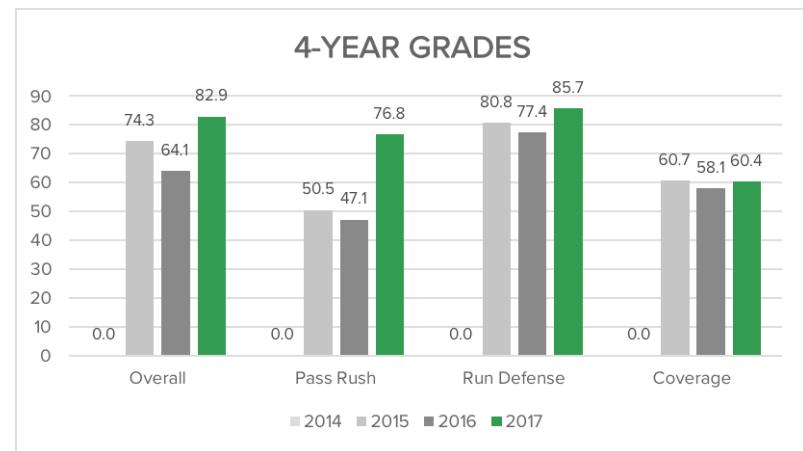

OVERVIEW:

- Explosive out of his stance. Can press tackles upfield shoulder and get them off balance.
- Struggles turning the corner. Even when he gets the edge on tackles, he often can't turn back to the QB.
- Never truly dominated a game from start to finish.
- Was held without a pressure in two separate games this past season.
- Rarely won if it wasn't on first contact. Lot of pass-rushes with no real plan of attack after the first move.
- Length to long arm tackles and keep them at bay. Especially shows up in the run game.

BOTTOM LINE:

Sweat never quite lived up to his recruiting hype at Florida State before declaring early for the draft. He has the height and length the NFL is looking for, but was limited by a lack of flexibility on the edge. You can't teach some of the traits he has though and he will draw interest as a project.

2015	98	46	52	1	1	0	0	6	2	0	5

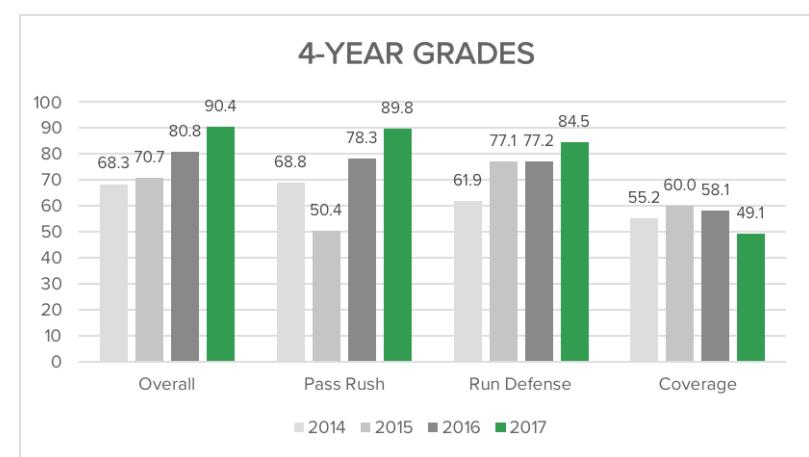

OVERVIEW:

- Some of the best hand usage in this entire class. Fights snap after snap with a myriad of moves to keep himself clean.
- Terrific balance. Plays extremely well through contact to finish. Had 45 total stops this past season.
- Competition is a major concern. Kansas, Syracuse, and Boston College were his only power five opponents this year.
- One-year wonder who saw his grade leap from 80.8 to 91.1 this past season.
- Undersized. Holding up against the run may be an issue at the next level and teams may even see him as an off-ball linebacker.
- Limited athletically and not particularly flexible. Doesn't 'look the part'.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ostman has maxed out his physical attributes about as well as one can. He's undersized and even against MAC competition he doesn't pop off the tape athletically, but he was a handful for every tackle he faced. If he can get his weight up while maintaining his play speed, he'll have a chance in the league.

OVERVIEW:

- Slightly built, speed rusher who was simply too athletic for many of the tackles he faced in the Sun Belt.
- Never had to develop his hand usage to win against lesser competition. A lot of pass-rushes with no plan of attack.
- The rare small school prospect with NFL caliber athleticism and flexibility. Pops off the tape right away.
- Size is a big issue. Will need to gain a considerable amount of weight to play in the NFL.
- Bull rush was nearly non-existent. Much more of a finesse than power player.
- Likely limited to a designated pass-rusher.

BOTTOM LINE:

Rolland-Jones is the kind of player whose athletic testing numbers will play a big role in his evaluation. He needs to add a good deal of weight from his playing days at Arkansas State and it's unclear if he can still be the same high-level athlete with added strength. He's not particularly refined at this point, but still was incredibly productive at the college level.

2015	570	300	269	5	10	24	0	42	10	4	42

OVERVIEW:

- As twitchy an athlete as you'll find in this draft class. Would at times beat college tackles with no more than his first step.
- Bend around the edge is elite. Can dip and play at an angle with the best of them.
- Something was very off with him senior year. Wasn't close to same player from junior tape. Missed last four games with ankle injury.
- Too often a one-move pass-rusher. If he doesn't win on contact he's taken out of the play. Sells out too often for sacks.
- Flashed speed-to-power, but strength is still an issue. Tad undersized and could be seen as a designated pass-rusher.
- He's not much of a hands fighter as a pass-rusher, though he knows how to work his hands on his rips and outside moves.
- Gets himself into trouble telegraphing directions without being able to counter. Could be deadly with his speed and more developed counter.

BOTTOM LINE:

The difference between Landry's junior year tape (89.0 overall grade) and senior year (83.9) is terrifying. Teams will have to do their due diligence as to why that's the case, but it could be as simple as a lingering ankle injury that ended his season. His junior season was the best we've seen from anyone in this class as a pass-rusher, and his off-the-charts athleticism suggests he will translate to the next level.

2015	363	196	164	4	2	16	0	17	4	1	17

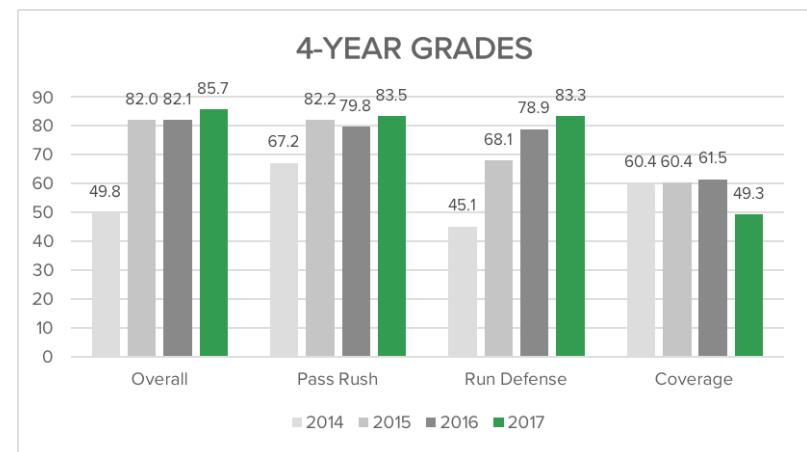

OVERVIEW:

- Looks the part from a size/athleticism perspective.
- Very active hands. Never done as a pass-rusher and can win late.
- Employed the rare outside spin move more than a few times and made it work.
- Kicked inside on third downs and can be used as a chess piece at the NFL level.
- Calculated pass-rusher. Not simply a one-move type of guy. Bases his moves on how the tackle plays him.
- Linear upward progression throughout his college career.
- Not overly explosive. No real high-level traits.

BOTTOM LINE:

Ejiofor was the definition of solid at Wake Forest this past season. He had at least three pressures all but one full game he played this year. There's not much about him that really pops off the tape, but he consistently gets the job done nonetheless. His ability to rush the passer from the interior is a legitimate weapon that can be taken advantage of in the NFL.

2015	524	305	215	2	4	22	3	10	5	5	9

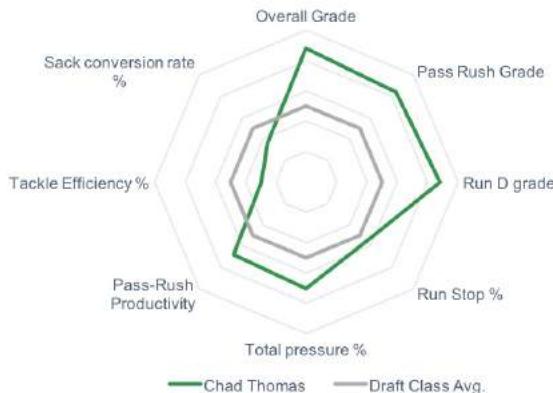

OVERVIEW:

- Proficient hands fighter. Powerful first strike when he wants to use it.
- Average athlete for the edge. First step isn't going to worry offensive tackles.
- Struggles cornering. Got pushed past the pocket far more than you'd like against college tackles.
- Battering ram. Size and strength to rush the passer from the inside as well as outside.
- Mediocre production for his career. Three-year starter with only 49 total stops over that span.
- Flashes dominant potential with some incredibly impressive reps.

BOTTOM LINE:

Thomas is a physical specimen, but didn't dominate in college like his traits would suggest. That's always concerning, but he took a big step forward this past year from previous seasons. Thomas has the versatility to play from multiple alignments, and should at worst be a plus run defender in the NFL.

2015	628	284	290	9	7	19	1	28	19	7	26

OVERVIEW:

- Has rare explosiveness for a 270-plus pound human being. Not many men his size can legitimately press the upfield shoulder of tackles like he can.
- A handful in the run game. Good luck getting movement on him if he doesn't want to be moved.
- Struggled against best offensive line he faced in Notre Dame. Only registered three pressures all game.
- Bull rush could be his go-to, but was rarely employed while at N.C. State. Had a few long arm rushes that were nearly unstoppable.
- Advanced hand usage as a pass-rusher already. Can win in a variety of different ways
- Very stiff turning the corner. Had more than a few rushes where he won the edge then either fell or got washed out of play from slight push.

BOTTOM LINE:

Chubb is such an easy projection because his game is already so well developed. He's a big, powerful base end that knows how to use his hands and could kick inside while still being solid against both run and pass. He's improved every season of his career and never had games where he completely disappeared. Ultimately though, he may be capped as a pass-rusher by his flexibility and doesn't profile as a high sack total type of edge rusher.

2015	563	334	222	4	13	39	3	23	9	7	22

OVERVIEW:

- Fits the long and lean mold of LSU edge defenders standing 6-6, 255 pounds with long arms.
- Took a leave of absence from LSU for personal reasons last spring and came back in the fall a tad heavier and slower after shoulder surgery.
- Freakish body control for his size. Could pass as a wide receiver his sophomore year the way he could dip and change direction.
- Rip is his go to move, but bull-rush is still a work in progress. Has all the tools to make it work in time though.
- Uninterested at times versus run. Struggles to hold the point against powerful tackles and can get out-leveraged.
- High end is arguably the most impressive in the class. Graded well against last year's first round tackle Ryan Ramczyk.

BOTTOM LINE:

Key's off the field evaluation may be as important as his on-field at this point. His grade dropped from 87.8 as a sophomore to 81.1 as a junior, which is just an added red flag. He's arguably the most physically gifted pass-rusher in this class and dominated the SEC as a sophomore, but he still has a ways to go technically. The question is will he be focused enough to put it all together?

2015	204	23	107	0	1	4	0	14	9	3	8

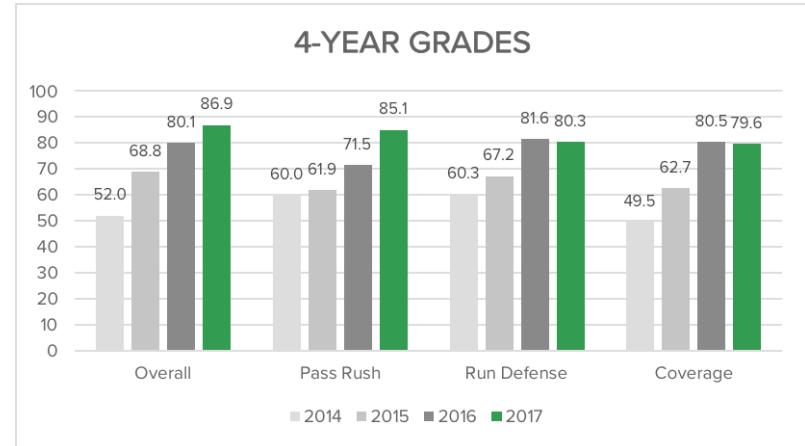

OVERVIEW:

- Agility that is immediately apparent on tape. Can stop on a dime and change directions during his pass-rush.
- Undersized for the position. Has to be on the edge and may even be limited to designated pass-rusher.
- Had an incredible 10 batted passes this past season.
- One-year wonder. Had three sacks and 43 total pressures to his name in three seasons before 10 sacks and 63 pressures this season.
- Disappeared when he didn't have a drastic athletic advantage over the opposing tackle.
- Legitimate coverage ability. Could even be seen as an off-ball linebacker by certain teams.

BOTTOM LINE:

Nwosu is a perfect fit for teams that utilize a true 3-4 outside linebacker. He's a capable underneath zone defender whose athleticism can be used as a weapon on blitzes/stunts. As a pure pass-rusher, he's nothing special, often getting by on little more than his athleticism. It's encouraging the strides he's already made from early in his career though.

2018 REESE'S SENIOR BOWL PRACTICE & GAME REPORTS

The Reese's Senior Bowl—college football's premier all-star game—calls Mobile, Ala., home. The game has evolved greatly in recent years, particularly since former Cleveland Browns general manager Phil Savage has taken the lead on the product. The league's relevant personnel realize the importance of the game, as they converge in Mobile once a year to see the best seniors compete one last time in pads before the NFL Draft. The Senior Bowl has become quite the media event, as well, as over 1,000 credentials were passed out at the most recent event, further displaying the importance of the game and the week of practice.

2018 marked the third year of a partnership between Pro Football Focus and the Senior Bowl, meshing two strong brands with similar goals. PFF provided valuable scouting and statistical data as the Senior Bowl built its roster, as well as a comprehensive grading and statistical breakdown of all Senior Bowl practices.

PFF's evaluations of every player on every single play of the NFL and FBS college football season made for a natural partnership with the Senior Bowl, as the game continues to prove its prominent role during the offseason draft process. The same level of detail that went into every snap of the college football season also went into the evaluation of Senior Bowl practices, and we're proud to post the results in the 2018 PFF Draft Guide.

Special thanks to Phil Savage, Patrick Woo, and the entire Senior Bowl team for once again putting together a fantastic week for evaluators, media and fans. The PFF team is looking forward to furthering the relationship with the Senior Bowl in coming years.
