BOTTOM LINE:

Woodside has two strong years of production under his belt and he's worth a look in the late rounds. He can throw with touch and accuracy in the middle of the field and he has a number of pretty deep passes on film while also showing the willingness to hang in the pocket and make tough throws. That toughness gets the best of him sometimes and he has some poor decisions late in the down and under pressure, but Woodside has the tools to be a solid backup at the next level.
